Seven seats filled in senate

By JULIE CLAY
News editor

More than 300 full-time students voted Tuesday at the Fall Fest elections for seven senator slots, 200 less than at Spring Fling elections.

"The turnout was pretty good since we only had three weeks to organize," Student Association elections chair Buck Bowen said. "I was happy we broke 300."

Association President Mike Lynch said the election was "pretty competitive, considering the number of write-ins."

The top vote-getter this year got 137 votes, and 21 write-in candidates were considered along with 12 candidates on the ballot.

"The election came quickly because we had seven open spots, and we needed to have those filled before we came into the heart of the semester," committee on committees chair Adam Back said.

"I wish we had more voter turnout," said Leslie Covington, ethics chair. "But we lacked publicity. We did have good participation, though, with 33 people ending up on the ballot."

Student Association has two representatives for each of the colleges on campus, and one representative for every 700 students on campus, Bowen said. Student Association

Fetus autopsy results next week

Help available for pregnancy questions

By JULIE CLAY
News editor

The results of a microscopic autopsy of the dead fetus found two weeks ago in a Clay Hall toilet will be released next week, Madison County Coroner Embry Curry said.

Although many questions still need answering about the Clay Hall incident, several programs and agencies are willing to help women who find themselves in a situation where they feel hopeless.

On campus, the Counseling Center at Ellendale Hall offers a place for Eastern students to discuss their feelings about pregnancy or any other life crisis.

Jen Colvin Walker, director of the center, said its goal is to provide a place for students to feel they could say anything they felt without any judgment.

The motto of the Madison County Crisis Center is "Hope, because there is help," director Kim Gardner said.

The non-profit, pro-life ministry center sees about 30 to 40 women a month, Gardner said, and has noticed the number increase since classes have resumed at Eastern this fall.

"Eastern is a big reason we are here," Gardner said.

Colonel quarterback Simon Fuentes, offensive co-captain Clifford Posey and defensive co-captain Britt Bowen light the fire intended to burn a dummy dressed in a Western Kentucky University football jersey at the Pep Rally-Bonfire Friday. The event was sponsored by Eastern's Spirit Club at the old dairy farm across from Roy Kidd Stadium.

JOHN ED MCCONNELL (1914 — 1997)

Distinguished alum, Blue Cross president dies

By JULIE CLAY
News editor

John Ed McConnell, a 1938 Eastern alumnus who went from the Forks of Elkhorn to the presidency of Blue Cross and Blue Shield, died Sept. 14 at Columbia Hospital in Frankfort.

McConnell said in 1993 that he "spent the four happiest years of my life here" when he gave the Eastern summer commencement address and received an honorary doctorate of laws.

The son of Franklin County sharecroppers, McConnell worked on the Eastern football team as a lineman and worked as a waiter to help earn money for school. He also played Colonel basketball. In his book titled "A Compendium of Kentucky Humor — My Kentucky, that is..." McConnell said he was a life-saving instructor and examiner for the Red Cross as an Eastern student.

"I was the only football player allowed to teach girls' swimming classes. That's the kind of fellow I was. Talk about wasting your youth, I really wasted mine," McConnell wrote.

His senior year, McConnell was elected class president, which started him on a road of public service as president of associations like the Kentucky and Louisville Chambers of Commerce, the Louisville Rotary Club and the Eastern Alumni Foundation. The profits from his humorous book of Kentucky anecdotes went to eye research at the University of Kentucky, a program he established.

"I think you ought to give back to the community and title of your time," McConnell said in a 1993 interview.

Elected Outstanding Alumnus in 1966, McConnell devoted a great deal of time and energy to his alma mater, which admitted him to the Hall of Distinguished Alumni in 1974. He also served as director of the Eastern Foundation, Inc.

and chaired the Planned Giving Committee.

"It's a sad week for Eastern," said former football coach Fred Darling. "He was always an outstanding leader and accepted opportunities to help other people. He was particularly outstanding in his support of ECU."

Don Feltner, vice president for university relations and development, said McConnell was "a great alumnus — every institution prays to have an alumnus like him. He was so personable. I felt much richer as a result of having known him."

"He stood tall among Kentuckians in his vision for and steadfast support of higher education and his alma mater. We will miss his wise counsel, contagious optimism and indomitable spirit," said President Hanly Funderburk.

Former football and basketball player J.W. "Spider" Thurman said, "He would go out of his way to be kind and help you in any way he could. He was a leader of campus."

McConnell was born Aug. 14, 1914 on a farm in Franklin County. He was the son of the late W.G. and Effie Goins McConnell, and was preceded in death by his wife Anna Gene Wells McConnell of Mt. Sterling.

He is survived by his brother, William Gayle McConnell of Cincinnati.

During World War II, he served in the South Pacific on the staff of Adm. Chester Nimitz and earned the rank of lieutenant gunnery officer.

The funeral will be at 11 a.m. today at Rogers Funeral Home in Frankfort.

In a copy of his book on file in the Crabbe Library, McConnell wrote "I owe Eastern a great deal."

Options to incineration still possible for depot

By GWENDA BOND
News writer

The search to find alternatives to incineration for disposal of the 1.25 million pounds of aging chemical weapons at the Bluegrass Army Depot advanced another step Monday.

At the meeting of the League of Women Voters of Berea and Madison County, deputy program manager for the Assembled Chemical Weapons Assessment (ACWA) program Bill Pehlivanian announced that proposals of alternative technologies had been received and that the process of looking at them will begin Tuesday.

The League sponsored the "dialogue" meeting as a community service to inform the public of recent developments in the chemical weapons disposal controversy.

"This is a new way for the military to do business. I believe there will be agreements reached between the DoD and the community about what to do with these weapons," said Doug Hindman, co-chair of the Kentucky Demilitarization Citizens Advisory Commission (CAC) and former Eastern psychology professor.

The 1997 Defense Authorization Act directed the Department of Defense (DoD) to identify and demonstrate at least two alterna-

Groups are trying to find alternatives to incineration at the Bluegrass Army Depot

What's out there

The Bluegrass Army Depot has three types of chemicals stored in its 38 chemical igloos:

- Mustard Gas (H) is an oily liquid. It has delayed action (hours). It is a vapor and contact hazard, and is primarily an incapacitant. It is a known carcinogen. The depot houses 181,260 lbs. of H agent in 155mm artillery shells. Since 1942, 38 H shells have leaked.
- Sarin (GB) is a volatile, colorless, odorless liquid. It is toxic and rapid-acting. It evaporates at the same rate as water. The depot houses 611,290 lbs. of GB agent in 8-inch shells and M55 rockets. Since 1942, 64 GB rockets have leaked.
- VX is an odorless, oily amber liquid that is rapid-acting. It evaporates at the same rate as motor oil, and it is stable. The depot houses 253,300 lbs. of VX agent in 155mm shells and M55 rockets.

Education department recognized among best

► As part of Kentucky higher ed reform, colleges will be asked to set up national programs of distinction. This is the third story highlighting four programs President Funderburk noted as possibilities for Eastern.

By GWENDA BOND
News writer

Eastern's education department has gained a reputation, not only for producing the most teachers in the Commonwealth, but for producing some of the best.

"We have an outstanding reputation as a good teacher preparation school and we work hard to justify it," the education department's curriculum chair Imogene Ramsey said.

Ramsey said that a key factor in the professional production of teachers is having a faculty with experience in classrooms as well as graduate study. She cited Eastern faculty as having "rich experience in their fields."

Randi Moore, an Eastern graduate who teaches at Jackson County High School, said she believes that the number of areas education students can specialize in coupled with the diversity of faculty experience is what makes the education program successful.

Eastern students also gain practical classroom experience at Model Laboratory School before they student teach.

"The variety of practical experience really helps

Lancaster solution needs student push

Lancaster Avenue "Frogger" has gained some more players trying to push the pause button for all Eastern students trying to cross the road.

Student Association members will attend the Richmond City Commission meeting today at noon to voice their opinions about the dangers of crossing Lancaster Avenue during school hours in hopes of getting something done about it. They also are going to circulate a petition next Thursday for students to sign about the safety, or lack thereof, on Lancaster Avenue and University Drive.

There have been complaints for years from students, professors, Eastern's President Hanly Funderburk and others connected to the university, that crossing Lancaster with the vast amount of traffic it carries is dangerous and could end up killing someone.

Students run from the sidewalk to the double yellow lines in the middle of the road, waiting to cross to the other side, all the while with traffic whizzing by them, sometimes close enough to touch.

So far solutions have been putting a crosswalk in with flashing yellow caution lights or putting an overpass across the avenue.

Any attempts to post the lights or add the overpass on the road, which is State Highway 52, must be cleared with the state. It has said a crosswalk would give students a false sense of security because it would not be a safe location. The overpass has been discussed since the 1980s when Lancaster Parking Lot was built.

The Highway Department has told the university in the past that nothing could be done. President Funderburk has said students would not use the overpass because it would take longer. Richmond City Commissioner Kay Cosby Jones, as well as President Funderburk, have agreed that something should be done about the road, though.

This has been going on for many years now and nothing has been done. Maybe Student Association, taking an aggressive stand by going before the commission and expressing its interest for students, will help to push a solution along.

Student Association should continue to make the Lancaster problem a priority; it obviously isn't getting any better with time or with occasional discussions.

Until the problem is remedied, students should avoid a "Game Over" by walking to the crosswalk at Barnes Mill Road to cross the street and signing the Student Association petition.

A VOICE IN THE DARKNESS

Student concerns, input need to be heard in president search

Last week a forum was held for staff and students to voice their concerns for the university's search for a new president. Four students showed up for the forum.

Four. The answers to why such a low number of students attended the forum are of two varieties.

One reason could be that students on campus care very little about the selection of their new president. Let's hope that's not the case.

The selection of a new leader affects students as much as anyone.

Another part of the problem, unfortunately, was the timing and location of the forum last week. Holding a meeting in which student input is one of the goals is excellent, but holding it at 2 p.m. in Brock Auditorium is not the best time or place to ask for student comment.

Brock Auditorium, in the Coates

Building, is a fair piece of a walk from many of the major classroom buildings. And at 2 in the afternoon, most students are in class.

The fact that student input is important to the selection of Eastern's next leader is a given. However, the pre-search meetings and discussions that happened last week did very little to extract that crucial student input.

A meeting of student leaders took place Monday of last week and was well-attended. One reason why could have been that the meeting took place at 3:30 in the afternoon, when students begin wrapping up classes and have time to journey to a building near the edge of campus.

Holding a meeting open to students and faculty at 2 p.m. is almost guaranteed to result in low attendance.

While providing input in the selection of Eastern's next president is important, to individual students it's probably not as important as being at a 2:15 biology lecture.

The point is that students shouldn't have to make a decision between going to class or voicing their concerns about their new leader. Although the search consultants were only contracted to be on Eastern's campus for two days, a forum for students should have been worked out at a time and place more convenient in relation to the university class schedule.

The only solution left at this point is for students to prepare their thoughts and submit them to the presidential search consultants via mail or e-mail.

The consultants are now beginning to formulate their presearch report and now is the last chance students and staff will have to provide input.

With or without a forum at a convenient time and place, student input needs to be heard. If the search consultants and committee won't come to the students, then the campus body needs to bring its input to them.

Commuter parking needs alternatives

It has come to my attention the extreme problem of commuters finding parking places on campus. I'm not talking about having to walk a long way. I mean no place to park. Why is it that there are several Zone B (resident) lots that are never full? For instance, Brockton Lot and Daniel Boone are generally not full at any time during the day. I say it is time for all us commuters to fight back. On the weekends (while almost all campus dwellers go home) we should take every spot in Zone B just to make our point. I can only hope that the proper authorities read this and take notice of my grievance before something drastic happens. Thirty dollars is a lot of money to spend on a parking permit that does us no good other than to make us park in other lots so we can be ticketed continuously or even towed. Reform must take place.

Women in trouble have options

As program director of Opportunities for Life, which operates a 24-hour pregnancy hotline throughout Kentucky, it saddens me deeply to hear about a student who recently gave birth in a women's college dormitory, and that she made the decision not to seek help regarding her untimely pregnancy. We may not know her particular situation, but fear of her pregnancy was probably part of the reason.

Please, if you or someone you know is pregnant or at risk for pregnancy, tell them about Opportunities for Life which is listed in all the yellow pages in Kentucky under abortion alternatives. We truly care about you. Twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year, Opportunities for Life answers the hotline and receives over 600 calls every month. As individuals and as a community, let's each of us make a difference to make sure we don't find another baby in this manner. Let's reach out by being aware of helpful resources.

Opportunities for Life's toll-free number is 1-800-822-5824. The most important message that any of us can offer a young lady who is pregnant is to remember that she is not alone and that we truly care about her.

UWR?

Eastern's writing exam really stands for Utter-Waste-of Resources

Jennifer Halcomb did something on a Saturday she had never done in her three years at Eastern.

Halcomb got up at 8:30 a.m. to take a test.

Not that she wouldn't get up early to take a test, but this test was on Saturday morning.

"I usually sleep in late on Saturdays," Halcomb said.

But because Eastern seems to think students here cannot write a simple essay, Halcomb and hundreds of other students had to miss their beauty sleep or Saturday morning cartoons Sept. 6 to take the University Writing Requirement.

Students with 60 or more hours are required by the university to take the exam to make sure they have essential writing skills.

But what it is really doing is wasting our time.

If you're in college and can't write a simple essay about some ridiculous topic given to you, then something is wrong.

A person should not be in college if they cannot write an essay.

But nevertheless, Eastern had students, some hungover and some working on four hours of sleep, write about people's eating habits and how they tell about our culture.

"It was a huge waste of time," Halcomb said. "We're in college. Obviously we're intelligent enough that we don't have to prove to them that we can write about food for an hour."

I also had to B.S. my way through the exam (is it really necessary to call it an exam?). However, this was not the first test like this I had to take.

I think I took one about six years ago — in high school.

If you're in college and can't write a simple essay about some ridiculous topic given to you, then something is wrong.

High school is supposed to prepare you for college.

If your high school did not explain to you how to write a simple five-paragraph essay, then well, I'm not going to cut down your high school, but...

For those of you out there who haven't taken it yet, there is really only one reason you could possibly fail it.

All of the people I know who failed it said they wrote so fast that they didn't care what they put down.

The only thing you have to do to pass it is take your time and make sure you have an introduction, a body and a conclusion (Doesn't it seem like teachers have been telling us that since the sixth grade?).

But myself, Halcomb and hundreds of other angry, tired students woke up one Saturday morning and wasted an hour of our lives.

"They could have at least had it during the middle of the week," Halcomb said.

Crash diets can't fix society's obsession with thinness

TIM MOLLETTE
Seven Turns

Mollette is a senior journalism major from Paintsville and editor of the Progress.

Statistics show that most Americans are fat. But if you ask any of the millions of people in this country if they're overweight, a majority would probably say no.

They might be husky, big-boned, a bit obese, are retaining water or just have a beer belly. But very few would actually say they are overweight.

There is a reason, though, why we create so many different euphemisms for fat — because it's easier than fitting society's definition of how great it is to be unafat.

As I do from time to time, I bought in to a weight-loss program during the summer. The reason being that my list of "sick and tired" entries was growing a little too fast:

- I was sick and tired of getting on those computerized scales in the mall and the printout reading "One at a time, please."
- I was sick and tired of going to a Chinese restaurant and management demanding I have an employee accompany me to the buffet every time I went.

- I was sick and tired of taking all the mirrors out of the bathroom, fearful of that day when I might get out of the shower and accidentally catch a glimpse of the naked truth (if you know what I mean).

In short, I had grown very disenchanted with my appearance.

So, like most Americans, I wanted an easy way out of my obese entanglement.

While at a health-food store, I found this "all-natural" drug that had special whatchamacallits that go into fat cells as they are digested to break them apart. Looking back it sounded pretty impossible, but still, I had my hopes.

What it didn't tell me on the box, though, was that there was a very specific diet I had to stick to for this magical Willy Wonka-esque medicine to work.

- This was the meal by meal breakdown
- Breakfast: a half grapefruit and water to drink (as long as it was unsweetened).

- Lunch: seaweed burger (no bun) and wood chips (as long as they were the low-fat kind and were boiled, not fried).

- Then a sensible dinner.

Sensible in this case meant anything without taste. Because, as I came to find out, for every milligram of taste a food has, it has a corresponding 12 grams of fat.

So what happened? Let's just say that my guttache still hangs over a pair of 36-inch waste khakis. You can still always pick me out of the crowd — I'm the guy with his shirt not tucked in.

There is a problem in this scenario that goes well beyond my battles with the scale, though. The problem is, this society has placed so much emphasis on what we look like, that anyone who is the slightest bit different from the popular idea of beauty is subjected to ridicule.

Oh, it may not happen right in front of us, but it happens. If you don't look like the half-naked guy in the shower of the Abercrombie and Fitch ad or like the female models in the Pepsi commercials, you're not acceptable. And chances are someone will comment on your clothing, your weight, your nose or your overly feminine (or overly masculine) mannerisms behind your back.

We've gone so far as a society that we associate how closely we come to fitting the collective definition of what looks good with how good a person we are.

I've been down that path. I've played that game, and I've learned that eating any amount of water soup (even if it's seasoned with saw dust) is not worth pleasing society's pathetic definition of what a medium build, 6-foot, 21-year-old male should look like.

My whole on-again-off-again weight ordeal has taught me two things:

One, low-fat cardboard is not very tasty, even when mixed with assorted plastics and covered with ketchup. And two, there are much worse things in this world than being a little overweight.

American woman more than bikini model

We are woman, hear us roar — while wearing an itchy-bitsy, teeny-weeny bikini.

This year, for the first time in history, women competing in the Miss America Pageant were permitted to choose the swimsuit in which they would walk down the runway.

The pageant, held Saturday night, like all pageants known commonly as "beauty" pageants, are supposedly for the betterment of womankind. The winner is supposed to represent American women as a whole.

Since when do all women look great in a bikini? In order to be a great woman, does she have to look better in a bikini than any other woman?

Representing womankind should be, and in reality is, about a lot more than being beautiful or how you look in your bathing suit.

Yes, talent and personality are counted in the competition too, but the way contestants look in a bikini and an evening gown is a part of it. Apparently, a large part of it.

When the pageant was advertised on television, the promotion was all about the new swimsuit option, not which contestant would show talent by playing the piano or which one would say she wanted to help children grow up in a kinder world.

Maybe the swimsuit competition and the pageant as a whole is out to say the woman who wins is who all women should strive to be. Maybe the swimsuit competition is to show that all women should be physically fit.

I don't see the judges having the women run on treadmills or lift weights to measure physical fitness.

Being able to walk down a runway in a bikini while not letting your gut hang out or your thighs jiggle is no small feat, but it doesn't accurately show physical fitness.

Isn't we taught as children that it's what's on the inside, not the outside, that counts?

Of course, no matter what anyone says, looks count, but when there are pageants bluntly saying it should be that way there is something wrong.

If contestants are judged by their beauty, and they are supposed to represent who the American woman is, isn't that saying that women as a whole should be judged by their looks?

There are many different kinds of women in this world who are wonderful, intelligent, talented, charismatic, and yes, beautiful.

And those talented, intelligent, charismatic women in the world who aren't physically fit, who don't look great in a swimsuit and high heels, what are they?

Losers?
No, I think not.

Depot: Proposals for incineration alternatives will be reviewed

tives for disposal other than incineration, awarding the project $40 million.

The DoD then formed the ACWA program, which unites citizens and the military for the first time in the 13-year history of the controversy about how to safely dispose of the chemical weapons located two miles from Eastern's campus.

The first phase of ACWA was completed this summer through a series of "dialogue" meetings at which community stakeholders, DoD employees, technical advisers and representatives from private industry determined the criteria by which alternative technologies will be judged.

"It's about time the community was involved in these decisions. Their input has been invaluable," said Pehlivanian.

Phase two — assessing the proposals from private industry — began Tuesday.

Details about the proposals will be released next month, Pehlivanian said.

Feasible proposals will be given $50,000 contracts in October to finish research for the final evaluation that will decide which technologies will be demonstrated in phase three of ACWA.

The projected end date for the program is December 1998.

If I had a hammer ...

Terri Bush, a 20-year-old athletic training major from Covington, and Scott Fancher, a 23-year-old science teaching major from Lexington, spent their Saturday volunteering for Habitat for Humanity. Bush and Fancher learned about the project through the Eastern chapter of Habitat for Humanity. Brandee Coffey, adviser for the group, said any student interested can attend the meetings which are held in the lobby of Combs Hall every Sunday night at 8.

Education: Majors have ACT requirement

From the front

when you go to student teach," Moore said.

This fall there are 135 students doing their student teaching at secondary, elementary and middle schools in the area, as well as in special education settings. These students are evaluated by Eastern supervisors who are all former teachers and who are familiar with recent Kentucky education reform.

To comply with the new state criteria, the education department has raised requirements for being in the program. Education majors must have a 21 composite ACT score, a 2.5 GPA overall and in their other subject of study. They must maintain grades of C or above in their education courses and be screened for speech and hearing sequencing.

Students in the special education program must meet these same requirements but also are charged with learning to face the challenges of teaching people with disabilities.

There are nearly 700 students in the special education program at Eastern, specializing in the areas of learning and behavioral disorders, deaf and hearing impaired, moderate to severe disabilities, communication disorders, early childhood, interpreter training and director of special education graduate studies.

Chair of the department of special education programs Martin Diebold said that special education is a field with a high demand for graduates, but the teaching field rewards basic human needs.

"Everybody has a need to be of service to other people. Teaching speaks to an inborn need to make the human condition better," Diebold said.

S. Melody Courts
Age: 18
Major: Pre-medicine
Hometown: Richmond

"As an involved student of Eastern, I am concerned about the safety of pedestrians crossing Lancaster. I also think the dangers of walking at night on campus need to be addressed."

Senate: Retreat up next

From the front will have 15 at-large members this year, he said.

Plans for next year's spring elections are underway to increase student involvement, Bowen said.

"In the spring, we are planning more advertising, extending elections to a two-day period and having a longer campaign time for candidates," Bowen said.

One of the first senate functions for the new members will be this weekend when members will attend a retreat at Mammoth Cave State Park to work on leadership skills and begin planning for this year, Lynch said.

The retreat will be paid out of a $2,500 special functions fund and a $2,400 in-state travel fund, according to the senate's budget.

"The biggest benefit from a retreat is you get to know each other so well, you feel more comfortable with each other and it gets people speaking at meetings later," Covington said.

The association has already gotten underway with some plans for this spring.

At the polls Tuesday, voters were asked to sign a petition for an overpass crossing Lancaster Avenue at University Drive, along a dangerous crossing for students.

The association will visit the Richmond City Commission meeting at noon today to present its case to city leaders, and plans to follow up with the state department of transportation until something is done about the crossing, Lynch said.

Next Thursday, the association will collect additional petition signatures all day at the crossing itself, Vice President Lisa Smith said.

Over the past 70 years, Ale-8-One has grown from a small-town drink to a Kentucky tradition

There are some things that just sum up Kentucky. College basketball, horse races and Ale-8-One. Yes, the drink that comes in the green glass bottle — and now the green aluminum can — has over the years become a Kentucky tradition.

"I really enjoy getting it really cold, ice cold, and then popping the top and sipping it and enjoying an Ale-8-One," said Denver Combs, a senior social work major.

Combs said he had his first Ale-8 in Winchester about a year ago, and now it's almost his first choice for soft drinks.

"I liked it. It was a crispy, refreshing taste," he said.

Now the drink that used to be confined to the central part of the state can now be found in all 120 counties in Kentucky and even in some areas outside of Kentucky, Ale-8-One's director of advertising and public relations Sandy Lawson said.

"We have customers all over the world, and the first thing they do when they cross the Kentucky line is look for an Ale-8-One," Lawson said.

But how did the fruit and ginger drink come to be an icon of the Bluegrass state?

How it all began

It all began in 1902 in Winchester when George Lee Wainscott created a soft drink bottling company called The Wainscott Factory on North Main Street. The factory bottled a number of different fruit-flavored soft drinks. Four years later it also began bottling a cola drink called Roxa-Kola.

Wainscott often traveled to Europe where ginger-flavored soft drinks were the drink of the day. He decided to create a ginger flavored drink for his company.

"He wanted a nice ginger-type drink," Lawson said.

During the 1920s, Wainscott worked to create his formula, and in 1926 he came up with one he was satisfied with.

Wainscott then held a contest to name his new soft drink. The winner was "A late one," suggesting that the drink was the latest trend, was submitted by a woman in Winchester. Because the drink came out during prohibition, Wainscott decided to change the name to Ale-8-One as a play on words, hoping the word ale would be more attractive to drinkers.

So a legend was born

Wainscott died in 1944. Now the company is run by his great nephew Frank Rogers III.

After 71 years, Lawson said the formula — only known to the president of the company — is still exactly the same. She said the only change the company has gone through is the packaging.

Lawson said the company started packaging Ale-8-One in green glass returnable bottles because it keeps the drink fresher longer. But now there are some variations. It can be found in non-returnable bottles and aluminum cans.

Lawson said although the company has changed its packaging, the returnable glass bottles, which are available in about 35 to 40 counties, are still their biggest sellers. And they're not planning on getting rid of them any time soon.

"We're kind of an old-fashioned company, we're going to keep it in an old-fashioned bottle," she said.

Lawson said Ale-8 has grown in popularity all over Kentucky in the past years. The plant, still located in Winchester, fills and caps about 200,000 bottles of Ale-8-One an hour.

Close to home

And Madison County and Eastern's campus are no exceptions to the drink's growing popularity.

Greg Hopkins, director of food services, said the school orders 30 cases, 720 bottles, of Ale-8-One a week.

"We don't want to run out because it's a fairly popular soft drink," Hopkins said.

The university began selling the drink two years ago because of the popularity it has in the area, and its "local appeal," Hopkins said.

"It's been popular," Hopkins said. "Our sales are greater than we anticipated."

Ale-8-One can be bought at the Fountain Food Court, Quackers on the Pond, and the Powell recreational area. They are $.80 a piece.

Beau Innella, freshman from New Jersey, had his first drink of Ale-8 in the Food Court. He was having lunch with his brother's girlfriend.

"She got it, so I just decided to," Innella said. "The first time I had it, I didn't like it. It kind of grows on you."

He said when he goes back to New Jersey he'll miss it. "Maybe I'll stock up before I leave," he said.

Chris Darmadji, a freshman from Indonesia, had his first drink of Ale-8 in his English 105 class this summer. He said his teacher, Vivian Rogers, brought it in for the students in the class.

"I thought it tasted it funny. It tasted just like water at first, but I like it now," he said. "I guess it just tastes like ginger ale, but it has a different taste to it," he said.

What is the taste?

"It's got a unique taste .... A lot of times it's an acquired taste, too," said Kristina Isenber, a freshman from Lexington.

"It's kind of like ginger ale, but it's got a funny taste. Kind of like ginger ale and fruit juice mixed," she said.

Kevin Griffis, a junior music theory and composition major, agreed that the drink has a ginger ale taste to it, but said Ale-8 was more mellow than ginger ale.

"It's the chardonnay of ginger ale," Griffis said.

There are people who don't think so highly of the drink.

"It's kind of dry, real plain," said Angie Jones, a freshman social work major.

Jones said she didn't think the drink had much of a taste at all.

Casey Craft, a freshman law enforcement major, agreed.

"I just don't like it," Craft said.

Still for some people, Ale-8-One is something special.

Lawson said she gets calls from people all the time about Ale-8-One stories. She said one woman called and said her uncle passed away, and Ale-8 was his favorite thing, so the family buried him with some.

She said people ship Ale-8 to friends and family members all over the world as special gifts.

"It's kind of like mom's home cooking — you miss it if you don't have it," Lawson said.

Up all night

"Once you start drinking it, it's got a lot of caffeine, so it's kind of addictive," Isenber said.

Lawson said the idea that Ale-8-One has more caffeine than other soft drinks is not true. She said Ale-8 is not made with corn syrup like most soft drinks, but uses sugar instead.

Ale-8-One has been a Kentucky tradition for more than 70 years.

"A lot of people come to Kentucky to get Ale-8, that's pretty cool," Darmadji said.

BEST MOVIE:

In an attempt to keep him from directing "Alien Resurrection," Hollywood gave director David Fincher ("Alien 3") another "Seven"-like movie to work on for '97. His product is "The Game," another dark, moody, complex piece of work that would make Rog Serling proud.

Sean Penn co-stars in "The Game."

Big-time investment banker Nick Van Owen's (Michael Douglas) brother, Conrade (Sean Penn), gives him an odd present for his 38th birthday. The present is a gift certificate for Consumer Recreational Services.

Thinking that this is some sort of "tennis club," Nick decides to give it a try. After a long day of tests, Nick is told that his game should start in a matter of days. Things get odd, though, when his application to CRS is denied, but the game starts anyway.

This is another terrific directing job by Fincher, except for the end. Until the last scene, this movie builds up to the perfect conclusion, only to dump it for a more conventional ending that confuses and disappoints.

With the right ending, this movie could have been better than "Seven," but as is, it's just a good movie.

Marching band brings earful of music

By SHAWN HOPKINS
Staff writer

Band President Katie McDonald, a senior who plays the mellophone, said that the purpose of the band at football games is "to help motivate — to cheer on the team and crowd. To get them to be motivated and entertained."

Evidence of this role was found at Saturday's game against Western.

Eastern's band has grown since last year and now includes over 120 members.

Though there will not be many changes made to the routine this year, the addition of the new members will give the marching band a bigger sound and stronger presence on the field.

For the first few games it will be playing a big band program, including songs such as "Summertime," from the musical "Porgy and Bess," and the compositions "Spain," and "It Don't Mean a Thing."

Senior Chris Wooton, a music major from Somerset performs a solo during "Summertime," which he showcased during the Western game.

The band is looking forward to an upcoming away game against Appalachian State, which approximately 40 band members will attend.

"This is the first away game we have been able to attend in a while,"

said Mike Galinger, a junior music major from Norwood, Ohio, who plays the sousaphone.

He hopes there will be a good crowd from Eastern to show its support for the team and the band.

Right before the Western game Saturday the band played an exhibition at Madison Central High School during a high school band contest.

The band members hope their performance will spark an interest in playing at Eastern.

With over 27 high school bands in attendance, the exhibition was a good recruiting tool for the music department, Galinger said.

The recruiting also serves as a way to look for hard workers as well.

Practicing six hours a week is not as discouraging as it may seem.

McDonald sees the benefits as far outweighing the time involved.

"I've met lots of friends through band," she says. "And I love to travel."

The band is conducted by Chris Hayes.

The band looks forward to making music and entertaining Eastern students and game fans.

There is an optimism about Eastern's band and music program.

"The group seems a lot tighter and more dedicated now," Galinger said.

Senior Chris Wooton performs his solo during the Western game Saturday. The band is expected to perform at the away game at Appalachian State.

Beatles' 'Revolver' musical, acid-fueled trip

By MICHAEL ROY
Arts editor

We all have one. An album that we listen to over and over that has either changed our lives or serves as inspiration.

This continuing feature will look at some of the best and possibly your favorites.

To kick things off, is my favorite album, the Beatles' "Revolver." Recorded in 1966, "Revolver" saw the band expanding ideas from its past with various musical influences.

The album kicks off with "Taxman," George Harrison's cynical look at bureaucracy.

Next is Paul McCartney's "Eleanor Rigby" a sad ballad about a lonely spinster that could also reflect McCartney's feelings about fans — "Look at all the lonely people. Where do they all come from?" McCartney spends most of the album turning out the usual ballads like the mournful "For No One," and the upbeat "Good Day Sunshine." John Lennon meanwhile goes off the deep end, musically speaking.

He has only one song that resembles his older work, the peppy "And Your Bird Can Sing." Beyond that Lennon comes off tired with the world on "I'm Only Sleeping" and not understanding it on "She Said, She Said."

Lennon also contributes the album's best track, "Tomorrow Never Knows," a wacky song combining backward guitars, manic drumming from Ringo Starr and lyrics pulled from the "Tibetan Book of the Dead."

For their parts, Harrison and Starr also bask in the acid spotlight. "Love You Too" has Harrison pulling out the sitar for a bizarre trip through his psyche. Ringo has vocal duty on only one track, "Yellow Submarine."

He does a good job, even if the song is a kiddie track if there ever was one.

In the end, "Revolver" stands as a good example of what a band can do.

Anyone wanting to review their favorite album can call 622-1872.

Purchaser to retire after 42 years

By ERICKA HERD
Activities co-editor

B.A. Grubbs

director of purchasing

Grubbs' career at Eastern began almost 42 years ago in the finance department. He plans to retire in December after 35 years in the university's purchasing department.

Hometown: Lawrenceburg
Grubbs plans on visiting family members and fishing after his retirement.

When members of Eastern's staff need something, B.A. Grubbs is the man to see.

But after almost 42 years of service and working under three different university presidents, Grubbs, director of purchasing, is retiring in December.

"There comes a time in life when you have to give up work and spend time with other things," Grubbs said.

Grubbs started his work for the university in 1956, when he came to work in the finance department. He then moved to the purchasing department six years later and has been there ever since.

His job includes buying what the university needs and assessing the right quality, price and quantity. He is in charge of providing the university with such items as office and maintenance supplies.

He said the campus has a central store where most of the equipment resides.

Part of Grubbs' job also includes inventory on campus.

He said he has a good working relationship with everyone and doesn't like a sore loser.

"I like it all. I don't have any enemies. I pride myself in business. I try to make no one unhappy and not everyone can do that," Grubbs said.

Grubbs said he always tries to be fair to all the bidders.

Don Knight/Progress

B.A. Grubbs has been working on Eastern's campus for over 40 years.

He explained how he has to know what purchase order to write and decide if an item is biddable as he pointed at the room full of folders that contained bids on items.

"I cannot give business to both persons because the law does not permit that. I have to get the lowest and best bidder," Grubbs said.

When Grubbs is away from all the bidding and purchasing he enjoys golfing, fishing and hunting, and unless he is sick, he tries to make it to all of Eastern's sporting events.

"I plan to spend more time golfing when I retire," he said.

Grubbs grew up on a farm in Lawrenceburg and he has a small garden at his home where he likes to watch his tomatoes and squash grow.

He also expressed his love for his church and family. He is a member of the First Baptist Church.

"I am active here with church and usher frequently," he said.

Grubbs said he has five grandchildren who range in age from 3 to 19.

He said he wants to spend more quality time with his family and visit with his grandchildren.

"It's a family thing," Grubbs said.

Grubbs said once a year he and his wife, who have been married for nearly 40 years, take a trip. They just returned from Wisconsin Dells.

The vice president of business affairs and all the employees are good people to work with, Grubbs said.

"I'll miss the people here," he said. "You can't find a better place to work than at this university. The students, faculty and staff have all been an inspiration to me. I will miss everyone."

Football: Western converts turnovers in win

Crume fumbled at the Western 49 and the Hilltoppers recovered. They took advantage of the turnover with a 26-yard Poisel field goal, stretching their lead to 23-14. LaTravis Powell's one-yard touchdown run put Western up 30-14 with :48 left in the third quarter. After Eastern drove to the Western 32 on the next possession, Fuentes was intercepted. Once again, Western converted the turnover into points with a one-yard Powell touchdown run. Eastern made the final 37-21 with a four-yard Crume touchdown run with 5:30 left. Crume rushed for 127 yards on 24 carries for the Colonels. Fuentes was 15 of 23 for 206 yards passing. He threw one touchdown and one interception. Chris Guyton led the Eastern defense with 11 tackles and eight assists. Britt Bowen had nine tackles and 10 assists for the Colonels. "It's tough to get your heads back up, that's why it's not that smart to start out with this tough schedule," Kidd said.
