Governing Body Chosen by Residents of Burnam Hall

The residents of Burnam Hall met in one of their study rooms last week and organized a student governing body. The following of-ficers were elected: Dorothy Moore, After all the business was taken up the girls had a get-acquainted party and enjoyed a lovely evening. For almost a year no students have lived in Burnam Hall because it was occupied by the Wacs. Since the departure of the Wacs more and more girls have moved into the building until now there is a sufficient number for reorganization.

peared on the campus? Kenneth wasn't exactly expecting her to come that weekend.

Just why can't girls get any service in the grill so long as the A. S. T. P. are present. A girl can stand for hours waiting to get an ice cream cone or a coke, but the girl on the other side of the fountain looks at her as though she were a stone wall and goes on with the very interesting and enlightening conversation with the soldier.

From a Military Viewpoint . . .

Despite the assurance that was given us that there would be man on the campus for spring the War Department decided differently, but spring not to be outdone arrived early for the convenience of the co-eds and A. S. T. P. They are making the most of short time in such inconspicuous places as the ravine and Walnut Hall. It's been nice having you boys on the campus. We hope we've changed a few of your ideas about Kentucky. (We do wear shoes). We'll miss you when you go, but wherever it is the best of luck to you. Remember that the wear mat will be out of the the welcome mat will be out at the Student Union, and you'll always be welcome to use it.

HEED THE CALL

March is the month during which the American Red Cross will conduct its annual roll call. $2,000,000 are needed and will be asked from the American people. This sum can be raised only by the wholehearted support of every person in the nation. This means the support of the thousands of students on college campuses throughout the land. The success of this drive depends as much on us in college as it does on anyone else. We must not let the program of the Red Cross be hindered by the lack of funds. The students at Eastern have already and a few back to the troops. taken part in this program by their contribution to the blood plasma drive last quarter. The support of students is needed again.

No one who has a relative or friend in the service can doubt first two weeks after your arthe usefulness of his gift. Neither does he have to be sold on the idea that the Red Cross does a splendid piece of work. That is girls and moonshine stills. We not our purpose anyway. Our purpose is to bring before the students in colleges that a donation tained us at a program in the to the Red Cross is a donation for the well-being of humanity. It is a donation for a humanity that is busily engaged in stopping forces of Japanese and Nazi aggression before those forces can destroy us.

TO ALL SUSCEPTIBLES: G. I. guys and college gals-

Are you susceptible to spring? Lend your wayward ear to a Freshie who learned the hard way, and listen while I give you a bit of well meant advice. Perhaps you think you are "wise to the game," that what's to be knowed you know, but believe me friend you may have a thing or two to learn. Alas! how well I know. If a few short weeks ago some kindly upperclassman had taken me aside and said, "See here, Freshie, I think you need a word of advice" and then proceeded to give, maybe I would have heard and heeded. No such sisterly advice came so I learned the hard way on the rough road of experience. There is a heart-stirring breath of spring rambling foot loose across the campus, and with the season, comes the frivolity of heart that can be so damning. (Believe me I know.) My window was open, the breeze lay cool fingers on my fevered brow, my nostrils breathed the sweet newness of another day. I felt the freshness of a clean white sheet with Hq. 12th Det. Sp. Troops, rise and fall with the regul occurrance of my breathing. A new sense of "devil-may-care" possessed my soul and that was the cause of my trouble.

of my solitude. (Angels of mercy, I think to ay are called-it's more like, angel, have mercy.) She advanced toward my bed with the same fiendish glint in her eye. She beat my pillow until my head throbbed from the pounding. She scrubbed my face until the epidermis began to show signs of wear. She jabbed a thermometer between my lips and gripped my wrist within her iron clasp. (I still wear a bracelet of said nurse's fingerprints.) Then, outrage of outrage, she began pushing vitamin pills and cold water into me without the slightest provocation.

The whistle no longer meant get up and go to class. To me, it was now just a warning to grab your mattress and hold on tight, for here comes the 'white terror'; because every hour, on the dot, she put me through the same grinding routine of pillows, scrubbings, thermometers and the mad race of pills and water.

When night came I closed my eyes in utter exhaustion and relief with the realization that until the morning at least, I was safe from this maddening Sometime before the moon had completely traced its course across the esterial heaven I awakened in a cold perspiration, a dreaded premonition clutching at my heart. Soon I realized the cause of this strange feeling. Within the dim shadow of the room I saw once more the white figure floating about. (I would say it was scarcely past 6:30 a. m.) I, the poor depraved fool, had come here to get a little rest. The days wore on, one, two, three . . . a whole week of it, each day more horrifying than the one preceded. My nerves were shattered, the hollow coals that had once been my eyes burned as they rolled in their sockets. A mere shadow of my former self, I gathered together the niggardly bit, of strength I had and took my departure from their holocaust of confusion. I returned from the hospital almost in nervous prostration. With the aid of my roommate I managed to drag myself into bed. For a day I lay in utter unconsciousness. until finally I regained a new shred of vitality. Five days have passed since the day I left the walls of the infirmary behind, and I am just now able to comprehend the seriousness of my terrible ordeal. It is with the hot scars of memory still burning in my mind that I say to you, "If you need a rest, stay in your room-don't be duped into dreaming up an imaginary pain, for if you go to the hospital you may never be able to erase the delema that you will find therepills, scrubbings, pillows, water. fractured ribs, thermometers, oh, the viscious stream of terror. Don't fall a victim to the spring, Get up when your alarm clock rings. I know, I learned the hard way.

The alarm clock rang. Then I fell completely over-board, I was a kid away from home in the mad grip of circumstance. From somewhere out of this beautiful universe a fiendish shadow creeped sinisterly into the dark recesses of my subconscious mind. The culprit no longer hung back but stood out in bold defiance of all my careful upbringing. An ominous idea had taken shape, until now I had managed to fabricate a marvelous headache and a few chills, my passport to a few weeks' rest in bed. Maybe my head did ache a little that morning ... but brother, I think my chief ailment was mattress trouble. Not just the kind that makes you want to cut class and dream awhile. Oh, no, I had a chronic case, the sort that makes you feel like setting the alarm for sometime in the middle of next week; so in a fool's paradise, I planned my own undoing.

The first thing I knew I found myself settling down for a comfortable time in the medicinal end of Sullivan's basement, contented in the success of my little scheme. Ah me, I breathed in the luxury of my new found idleness. Indeed it is great to be young and alive. I sighed and snuggled down still farther and slipped off into a land of total blissfullness-slumber.

spring, birds, and ringing bells when I felt a sudden jab in the ribs. For a moment, I was ready to holler "air-raid"; but finally, when I re-gained my senses, I realized the friendly tap had come from my friend, the doctor.

"Does that hurt?" she asked. So help me I don't know whether it did or not. I haven't regained feeling in my right ribs yet. I hope to be able to answer her question sometime next week. When she finally took her departure, I dislodg-ed a stray tongue blade from my ed a stray tongue blade from the pulmonary pleura and resumed as best I could my normal state of ex-istence. What hidden tales a sea can gain, Engulfing lives of its free will ships gone down to Davey's Of reign.

A million men have now been slain Another million dying still, What hidden tales a sea can gain

The sea, all water, receives its rain Of sanguine floods of human kill, Of ships gone down to Davey's reign.

These swirling waters do disdain Careers whose end is unfilfilled. What hidden tales a sea can gain

We build up navies to attain Prestige o'er all, achieving nil, Of ships gone down to Davey' reign.

These perished souls with briny pain

Have paid their fill of Neptune's bill; What hidden tales a sea can gain

Of ships gone down to Davey's reign.
