America's Promise Pledges to Help Youth

ABOVE – Gov. Paul Patton and First Lady Judi Patton joined Retired Gen. Colin Powell (center) to sign a Governor's Promise Partnership at the America's Promise Summit Nov. 10 in Alumni Coliseum, where an estimated 6,000 were in attendance. Witnessing the pledge-signing were representatives of kindergarten through post-secondary education.

BELOW – AmeriCorps volunteers marched into the Alumni Coliseum during the America's Promise Parade, which concluded with the entrance of Gov. Patton and Gen. Powell. In 1999, EKU became only the 11th institution of higher education nationwide – and the first in Kentucky – to be named a University of Promise.

President Kustra, Gen. Powell and Gov. Patton headed a long list of distinguished guests at the Summit, which was designed to help participants learn how they could implement or enhance Promise programs. Gen. Powell has served as chairman of America's Promise – The Alliance for Youth since 1997.

21 Attend Prestigious Teaching Conference

EKU was well represented recently at one of the nation's most prestigious conferences devoted to excellence in college teaching.

The University's Teaching and Learning Center sponsored the participation of 21 faculty members in the 20th annual Lilly Conference on College Teaching at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio Nov. 16-19.

"We were the best-represented university at the conference," said Dr. Hal Blythe, co-interim director of the Teaching and Learning Center, which offers a wide range of services designed to enhance teaching effectiveness.

The participants came from a broad cross-section of the EKU academic community. Attending were Blythe; Dr. Bill Jones, TLC co-director; Dr. Steve Konkell, Environmental Health Science; Dr. Paula Bickham, also a presenter at the Conference, and Dr. Anisa Al-Khatib, Administrative Counseling and Educational Studies; Dr. Gaby Bedetti, Lisa Bosley, Dr. Margaret Dean, Dr. Richard Freed, Dr. Paula Kristofik and Barbara Szubinska, English; Kathy Tuminski, College of Health Sciences; Dr. Muriel Stockburger, Administrative Counseling and Educational Studies; Mary Slater, Associate Degree Nursing; Dr. William Staddon, Biological Sciences; Dr. Martin Brock, Chemistry; Dr. John Ferguson and Dr. Geri Polvino, Exercise and Sports Science; Dr. Jon Maki, Earth Science; Dr. Jo Ann Ewalt, Government; and Pamela Black, Anthropology, Sociology and Social Work.

"This conference brought together some of the top professors from all over the United States to talk about ways faculty can be more effective in the classroom," said Jones. "I think it says a lot about our faculty when this many participated."

Benefits from the Conference won't stop with the participants, Blythe said, since they are

"I think we have an outstanding faculty very committed to being the best in the classroom that they can be." expected to share their experiences and knowledge with colleagues. Also, materials from the Conference are available at the Center.

"We want to get as much mileage as possible out of this for our entire faculty," Jones said. "I think we have an outstanding faculty very committed to being the best in the classroom that they can be. This conference can't help but stimulate them to other ways of doing things that might be even more effective. This team of EKU faculty has brought back to campus some cutting-edge ideas in teaching and learning."

New Phoenix Center Will Mediate Conflicts

EKU students and student organizations needing help resolving disputes now have a campus outlet.

The new Phoenix Center is a campus-wide mediation center that mediates disputes, serves as a training center for conflict resolution, provides students interested in dispute resolution careers a place to gain experience, and serves as a research facility to advance the study of conflict resolution.

The center uses co-mediators to help maintain neutrality and to help both disputants feel heard and understood. Initially, conflict resolution services are being provided by Dr. Amy Thieme, associate professor, and Dr. Tyler Harrison, assistant professor, both in the Department of Communication. Eventually, peer mediators will provide the service to fellow students.

"We do have some students majoring in dispute resolution who also are trained mediators and will be involved as secondary mediators until they gain more experience," Harrison said.

The Department of Communication offers an undergraduate degree in dispute resolution where students learn mediation, negotiation and other conflict resolution strategies. "Students who complete the mediation course receive training equivalent or superior to what many practicing mediators receive," Harrison said.

"We see the center as a way to help students gain practical experience while also serving the needs of other students on campus," he said.

The Phoenix Center, which is located in Powell 130, is administered by the Office for Student Affairs, headed by Vice President Dr. Dee Cockrille, who oversaw a similar operation at Marshall University.

"We provide assistance to students concerning complicated administrative processes that often overwhelm students – such as grade appeals, grievances and complaints," Cockrille said. "We expect to help resolve disputes between roommates, student organizations and even some disciplinary issues."

To schedule an appointment, or for more information about the Phoenix Center, call 622-2642.

Conference Topic Dec. 7: Kentucky's Judiciary

Lambert

EKU's Center for Kentucky History and Politics and the Kentucky Supreme Court will co-sponsor a day-long conference Thursday, Dec. 7 at the Perkins Building on "Kentucky's Judiciary: Looking Backward, Looking Ahead."

The Kentucky Constitution was amended in 1975 to make major changes in the judicial branch.

The morning session, beginning with registration at 8:30 a.m., will feature two panels looking back at the past 25 years. Justice Secretary and former Chief Justice Robert Stephens will moderate a panel of judges and prominent attorneys who will discuss "Launching A New Judicial System." Legal scholars from EKU and the University of Kentucky will discuss "Strengths and Weaknesses of the Current Judicial System," and former Lexington Mayor James Amato, who headed the campaign to pass the amendment, will speak on "The 1975 Judicial Article: How Did It Ever Pass?"

The afternoon session will include a luncheon address by Chief Justice Joseph Lambert on restoring confidence in the judiciary and a panel of family court judges discussing one of Kentucky's recent judicial innovations — the Family Court.

The keynote speaker for the conference will be Indiana Supreme Court Chief Justice Randall T. Shepard, who speaks at 2 p.m. on "Judicial Reform Is No Sport for the Short-Winded." Shepard holds several positions of national leadership in the American Bar Association (ABA) and recently chaired the Appellate Judges Conference and ABA's Section for Legal Education and Admissions.

Every panel discussion will include opportunities for comments and questions from the audience. The conference will conclude at 4 p.m.

"All three living chief justices in the 25-year history of the new court system will participate in the conference," Dr. Paul Blanchard, director of EKU's Center for Kentucky History and Politics, noted. In addition to Lambert and Stephens, former Chief Justice John Palmore will serve as a panelist.

The cost for the conference is $25, or $10 for full-time students. Reservations should be made no later than Friday, Dec. 1. For more information, contact Blanchard at 622-4380 or govblanc@acs.eku.edu or Tom Appleton at 622-1365 or hisappleton@acs.eku.edu.

Smith to Address Kentucky's Future

Al Smith, host of KET's popular public affairs program, "Comment on Kentucky," will speak on "Kentucky Today and Tomorrow" in a Nov. 29 program co-sponsored by EKU's Center for Kentucky History and Politics and the Richmond Chamber of Commerce.

The event will be held at 7:30 p.m. at the Richmond Area Arts Center at the corner of Lancaster and Water streets.

Before he speaks, Smith will receive the first Bert T. Combs Award for Excellence in Kentucky Government and Politics. The award, established by EKU's Center for Kentucky History and Politics, will be presented by Gov. Combs' widow, Sara.

"Bert Combs not only served as governor of Kentucky, but he had a distinguished second career as a judge," said Dr. Paul Blanchard, director of EKU's Center for Kentucky History and Politics. "One of his most significant contributions was as lead attorney for the 66 school districts that sued the state and led to the passage of the Kentucky Education Reform Act."

Smith is a former newspaper editor/publisher and former co-chair of the Appalachian Regional Commission, among numerous other contributions to Kentucky life.

"He has made contributions in public service all across the board in Kentucky," Blanchard said. "Al's ideas on the future of Kentucky will be provocative and compelling."

MEMORIAL SERVICE HONORS 41 MEMBERS OF ECU FAMILY — The University community honored the memory of 25 students and 16 faculty members (some retired) at a memorial service Wednesday, Nov. 15. The 41 had lost their lives since January 1999. Dr. Michael Marsden, provost and vice president for academic affairs, was among those who made remarks.

Senior Honored as Outstanding Attorney

Senior political science major and ROTC cadet James Taylor received the Outstanding Attorney Award at the American Mock Trial Association's invitational tournament, held Oct. 19-22 at the University of South Carolina Spartanburg.

"My plans are to go to law school after graduation," Taylor said. "The mock trials offer an excellent opportunity since you take on all roles in a trial. The school teams have to prepare just like an attorney preparing for a civil or criminal case. It most definitely gives you an insight into how much work actually goes into a trial."

This is the second year of mock trial competition for Taylor, who tied with two others for third place among 66 student attorneys at the Spartanburg invitational. Last year, he also received Outstanding Attorney awards at two regional tournaments.

Professor Completes Pottery Guide

In addition to giving readers a comprehensive guide to 62 of the Commonwealth's professional contemporary studio ceramic artists, Joe Molinaro's "A Pottery Tour of Kentucky" is serving as the impetus for establishing a statewide potters network and is the start of a new series of art tour guides.

"The book gives the ceramists in the state an identity by putting them in a category, in a group," said Molinaro, an associate professor of art at EKU, who is working with Berea potter Gwen Heffner to form the potters network.

"It's easy to pull that all together when we have this book as a guide," Molinaro said.

"And we're finding that art galleries outside of Kentucky are buying the book because it's a way for them to quickly locate a ceramist in Kentucky to invite into shows or represent in their galleries," said Molinaro, a two-time Fulbright Scholar for his Ecuadoran pottery studies.

"Pottery Tour" provides a brief background on Kentucky's ceramic art, then divides the state into five geographic regions — the River, Highlands, Cumberland, Western Lakes and Bluegrass — and provides an overview of the art community for each.

Within a region, artists are listed by the towns in which their studios are located. Each two-page profile includes the artist's photo and biography; photographs of his or her work; the artist's mark; contact information; the studio's location, hours and directions; and which Kentucky galleries also carry the artist's works.

Published in August by Crystal Communications, the book has been popular with in- and out-of-state gallery owners, collectors, art and clay lovers and museum curators.

Molinaro includes three artist indexes — alphabetical, by region and by county. He also provides an alphabetical listing of the Kentucky art galleries featuring works by these ceramists.

Fellow EKU art professor Tim Glotzbach is applying for sabbatical to work on one of the guidebooks — a tour of Kentucky's jewelrymaking art studios. Over the next three to five years, Crystal Communications, publisher of "Arts Across Kentucky" magazine, hopes to release "art tour" books on jewelry, woodworking, quilts, folk art and other art topics.

Read a Good Book Lately?

Richard Firstman and Jamie Talan's "The Death of Innocents"

Dr. Kathryn N. Polmanteer, Assistant Professor, Special Education

"The Death of Innocents" is a medical-legal thriller that details the true story of multiple murders of five young children in one family misdiagnosed as Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS). Citing accounts surrounding the 25-year-old deaths, the authors reveal how the scientific and medical communities at the time based knowledge of SIDS on imprecise research, unconfirmed theories and unethical practices. This resulted in erroneous presumptions such as SIDS running in families and the benefits of apnea monitoring.

The book is lengthy and gets bogged down in names, places and events, but overall the authors do an excellent job of weaving pieces of the story together. It was both stunning and scary to learn that widely accepted premises about SIDS are based more on medical egos than on sound, scientific research.

Grab your reading glasses (the print is small) and give yourself plenty of time to tackle this book. You'll likely come away wondering what other myths drive our current thinking.

Eastern Family Portrait

Name: Kathy Werking

Education:

B.A. (1981) in communications from DePaul University, and M.A. (1984) and Ph.D. (1992) in communications, both from Purdue University.

Job Description:

As an assistant professor in the department of communication, my primary responsibility is teaching, but I also have a quarter release time to work for CEDET, the Center for Economic Development, Entrepreneurship and Technology. I work on economic development projects in Eastern Kentucky, writing grants and conducting research (mostly evaluating programs).

Courses Taught:

Small group communication, communication theory, training and development, and the basic communication courses.

Family:

I'm single and while I don't have any two-legged children, I do have lots of four-legged ones — dogs, cats and goats.

What's the most rewarding part of your job?

First, helping my students, particularly the majors. I like talking with them about their career plans, teaching them and getting them to think about issues and communication skills that will be beneficial in their personal and professional lives. But the second part I love is the economic development work. I work with small businesses, particularly craft businesses. It's been wonderful working with them to develop programs that will assist them in promoting their businesses. I'm also coordinating the Kentucky Artisan Heritage Trails.

If you weren't doing this job, what would you like to be doing?

I would be an artist. I'm a part-time artist anyway, but I would be doing that full time. I paint floor cloths, a heavy canvas that was a popular floor covering during the late 1700s and early 1800s before linoleum and rugs were mass-produced. When other types of flooring became more affordable, floor cloths fell from favor. But today, with people doing restorations, there's an interest in them again. It's art you can walk on.

What are your interests and hobbies?

I'm restoring a 210-year-old farmhouse in Bourbon County. I also enjoy raising animals, growing herbs and painting.

Do you have a guilty pleasure?

I don't very much anymore, because I don't have time, but whenever I'm at home during the day, I tune into the ABC soap operas, especially "All My Children." I had a roommate in 1977 who got me hooked. I blame it on her.

What is your favorite food?

Mashed potatoes and gravy.

What is your favorite vacation spot?

The coast of Maine because of the beautiful ocean with the mountains very close by.

What is your favorite Web site?

The Weather Channel. I'm really into maps.

What is in your CD or tape player at home right now?

Nickel Creek, a bluegrass band.

What book would you recommend to others?

Right now I'm reading a book I really like called "Making a Life, Making a Living," by Mark Albion, a former Harvard professor. It talks about putting your values in your work, making sure you're doing work you feel passionate about and that it's work that reflects your identity.

What person do you admire most?

A Buddhist woman by the name of Sharon Salzberg. She has written several books about the Buddhist philosophy of loving kindness. I really admire her take on the world and her philosophies. I guess if I have a role model, it's her.

What makes you happy?

The little things make me happy, like being out in nature. The other day I got elated because a flock of Canadian geese flew overhead and I could hear their wings flapping. I'm an easy sell.

What is one thing about you that people might be surprised to know?

That one time I was earning my living as a cocktail waitress on roller skates in a poodle skirt in a Montana bar called Chances Are, which had green neon lights all over the place.

What issue concerns you most about today's world?

The atmosphere of fear. I think that's really pervasive in our society.

If you could have dinner tonight with one historical figure from the 20th century, who would it be?

Two actually — Susan B. Anthony and Elizabeth Cady Stanton because they believed in something and stood up for it in spite of some personal odds. They were not popular women and yet they persevered. They also had a great friendship.
