SUMMER 1974/VOLUME 13 NO. 2

Alumnus Editorial

As we mark the close of our Centennial Year, we cannot help but evaluate the past, to reflect upon those persons and institutions that played significant roles in Eastern's development.

Reflecting on the past, however, must not make us complacent in the snug haven of our heritage; it should rather inspire us to new heights in our second century.

We have certainly learned from our lessons in history. We have seen bold men take uncertain steps at the right times and survive because they had the courage to make those decisions. We have seen our leaders branch out and initiate new programs to meet society's demands. History has taught us well.

But, as we enter Century II, we must continue to change. Change is inherent with the passing of time and only if we change, however cautiously, in order to fulfill our purpose can we hope to remain strong.

Future freshmen may be taking Space 1; the sophomores Space II. The upperclassmen interested in science, or simply in surviving, may enroll in Solar Energy 368. The ever-present cafeteria may become a thing of the 20th century as campus capsule dispensaries become modern replacements. Weekend suitcasers may have a fling on Mars and practice telepathic learning on their way from the campus. The possibilities are endless.

There will always be, of course, the less extreme basics — teaching, research, and service. Man will always need to know how to communicate with others; he will always be in constant search for the answers to his personal and social ills. From this standpoint, Century II will be no more than a sophisticated extension of the past 100 years.

Century II, a bold mystery that some of us, through the miracle of modern medicine, may see completed. It begins, officially, on September 23, 1974, and as each days passes, it will reveal new vistas for Eastern Kentucky University, vistas that touch all of us who are or have been a part of the institution.

We can only hope that Century II will be as exciting, dynamic, and fruitful as its predecessor. Only time can tell.

Notes ... From The Editor's Desk

THE CENTENNIAL YEAR Observance reached an action-filled climax during a four-week period this spring, and Eastern's Alumni played a very major role in the significant events that virtually packed that time span.

Of course, the entire year had been one of special activity. Centennial lectures, concerts and other programs had marked the celebration of higher education's first century on the Eastern campus, but all that was just prologue to the events that began April 20.

That evening, 25 of the greatest athletes in the history of Eastern were honored at the Centennial Alumni Awards Banquet in the Keen Johnson Building. Each of the honorees received a commemorative award, dominated by a full-size Earl B. Combs model Louisville slugger. The Hall-of-Famer's bat reproductions were turned from the timber of a white ash tree that died on the campus soon after the construction of the Burrier Building. Foresters on the campus and at Hillerich and Bradsby, who turned the bats, estimated the age of the tree at - appropriately - one hundred years.

The next event was the Centennial Pageant, which provided an evening of wonderful nostalgia for all EKU grads who were able to see it. Likewise, the Centennial Ball, with its gala decorations and dance contests provided a wonderful remembrance of how campus dances "used to be."

But, the biggest weekend, for alumni and for the University, began Friday evening, May 10, and continued through Saturday and Sunday.

Friday night was the occasion for one of the most truly memorable events in the 100 years of higher education on our alma mater's campus. The university honored 101 of the outstanding graduates of the institution, representing almost every field of endeavor. All but six of the honorees were present to receive their awards. It took some mighty important business to keep them away. Karl Bays, for example, president of the American Hospital Supply Corporation, was in the Peoples' Republic of China exploring new markets for his company's products.

The 101 honorees joined the 25 athletic award recipients as the initial entrants to a Hall of Distinguished Alumni which has been established on the main floor of the Keen Johnson Building. Short biographical sketches of each honoree begin on page 59.

Saturday was a double-barrelled day of activity. In the afternoon the Alumni Association dedicated and presented to the University its magnificent Centennial Year gift, the statuary by Dr. Felix W. de-Weldon saluting one of the great achievements of the last century, America's space exploration program. Members of the Centennial Club, who financed the project through their generous contributions, were guests at a luncheon preceding the program and were seated in places of honor at the dedication itself.

The annual Alumni Day Dinner was held that evening, and a largerthan-usual crowd saw Leslie Anderson, the first person to receive an Eastern diploma, receive the 1974 Outstanding Alumnus Award.

Sunday was Mothers' Day, and appropriately the date of baccalaureate and commencement exercises. And, significantly for the alumni association, a record 1,861 new graduates entered the alumni rolls.

EKU

AS IMPORTANT as ending the first century of higher education on the campus, is the fact that Eastern Kentucky University is embarking on its second hundred years. This second century is already presenting challenges on Eastern, and, in fact, to all of higher education, that will require participation by alumni if these challenges are to be met. In the recent annual giving lett to Eastern alumni, J. W. "Spide Thurman spoke in plain terms abo the value of alumni support to th University. He asked for the fin ancial assistance of Eastern's graduates, announcing as a goal th exceeding of the annual gift $11.62 recorded last year. And, hasked for the help of EKU graduate in recruiting good students for the alma mater, and for our alumnine expand their roles as ambassado of the institution.

A large measure of Eastern's success in continuing to develop is programs of educational opportuni will depend on its alumni. The University, as it enters its second century, is fortunate that its body of alumni has grown to some 29,000, sizable number that should be ab to perform real services for the alma mater. You may use the cond tribution card located betwee pages 42-43 to indicate how muc you care for Eastern.

EASTERN LOST its only survivir former president March 5, when D W. F. O'Donnell succumbed follov ing a long illness. His death fo lowed by only three months th passing of his gracious first lad Mrs. O'Donnell, which was reporte in the last issue of the Alumnus.

Thousands of Eastern graduate remember Dr. O'D, the first man t retire from the Eastern presidenc as a warm, friendly person with a obviously sincere interest in them

All associated with the Universiare much richer for the 33 yea Dr. O'Donnell was associated with Eastern. His 19-year tenure as preident is the longest of any EKU preident, and he spent the last 14 yea as the University's president-emertus.

Until his health began to fail i recent years, he was a regular spetator for the home games of mo every sport, and took his place (honor in the academic procession for commencement exercises. We will all miss him.

ABOUT THE COVER

This issue's cover features the Centennial Year statue, a gift of the Alumni Association to the University. Cast in Rome by sculptor, Felix W. de Weldon, the 28-foot bronze figure is an adaption of the Astronaut's Medal, also created by de Weldon. The orbits of stainless steel interpret the techniques used in the United States' manned moon expeditions.

THE CENTENNIAI WHIRLWIND

By Ron G. Wolfe

Two storms struck Richmond this pas spring.

One came on April 3 in the form of a ravaging tornado that left death and de struction along its capricious path. It did no hit the campus.

The other whirled through the campu some five weeks later in a more benevolen form — Alumni Weekend, the climax o Eastern's Centennial Year. It was the enc of a storm that had quietly started brewing some ten months earlier and increased ir force to the final frenzy — alumni honors reunion classes, luncheons, a statue unveiling, and graduation.

One left heartache and bitter memories in its wake; the other left only joy and fonc recollections.

One's course was unpredictable and violently fickle; the other was carefully planned and executed.

Both struck when the conditions were right and neither hit without prior warning.

The first was short in its duraon, about three minutes according one observer. The other was a ear long and ended in a different nd of fury. The Centennial Year orm was more welcome although hen it was over, the planners took lief from the fact that it couldn't rike again for another 100 years. During the 1973 Alumni Day acvities, President Robert R. Martin nounced that Eastern's Centenal Year was to begin in July. "We ill use the year to draw attention the University around the state nd across the nation," he said.

At that time, his comment gave o inkling of the force which would on begin to gather in intensity. A Centennial Committee set bout to make plans for the year, build the activities into a deeloping series of well-organized ents which would mushroom into stive proportions by Alumni /eekend. The committee, conaired by Donald Feltner, Viceresident for Public Affairs, and hn D. Rowlett, Vice-president for cademic Affairs, featured students, umni, faculty, and administration. Initial plans called for designing Centennial Medallion which ould symbolize the 100 years of gher education on the Richmond impus. Covering a century full of gnificant details on two sides of 1 egg-shaped medallion posed election problems for the commite.

The end result featured busts of obert Breck, first chancellor of entral University from 1874-1880, nd Ruric Nevel Roark, first presient of Eastern from 1906-1909, on one side. Above Dr. Breck the planners placed a cross symbolizing Central University's status as a Presbyterian institution and the Latin motto, "Lex Rex, Crux Lux," "The Law is our King, the Cross is our Light." Above Dr. Roark they placed the University's three-word motto, "Vision, Industry, Integrity." Two flames of knowledge were enclosed by a border around the busts with the words "Eastern Kentucky University" and the Roman numerals for 1874-1906.

The Quiet... Before the Storm

Even during the fury of Centennial Year festivities, students found time to enjoy the quietude of the ravine (top right). However, a ravaging fire in downtown Richmond in October ironically indicated the pace that was to mark the celebration of Eastern's 100th birthday.

The other face of the medallion became a montage of three campus buildings — Old Central, Central University's main building, and the Keen Johnson Building and the John Grant Crabbe Library. On that side, the flames of knowledge flanked the dates which were determined most significant in the Centennial Year — 1874-1906-1974.

Realizing that a University is a citadel for learning, the committee also planned a series of Centennial lectures with a wide variety of speakers and subjects. Dr. Margaret Lindsay of Columbia University, Dr. Jack Frymier of Ohio State, and Dr. Harry Broudy from the University of Illinois were among the noted lecturers. These became a series of refreshing showers as plans churned for more active weather.

Other areas of the campus added to the brewing storm. "A Century of Memories," the theme for a "high pressure" Homecoming enhanced the Centennial Year as it brought back graduates and reminded all who attended of the University's rich heritage. Queen candidates used antique cars and Entertainers and lecturers like the Temptations (above right) Senator Henry "Scoop" Jackson (above left) and Vincent Price (right) kept the campus community involved in the celebration. A Centennial Lecture Series was held in conjunction with the year's observance.

costumes in the parade and the winning Baptist Student Union float announced, "Eastern, You're Not Getting Older, You're Getting Better."

With amazing regularity, students, faculty, staff, administration and friends were reminded that the Centennial Year was in progress. The local paper carried a daily Centennial Year seal on its front page. The Centennial Milestone was planned and executed, complete with a historical section. The Eastern Progress carried the Centennial seal weekly on either side of its nameplate while various campus offices stuck the familiar emblem to correspondence around the world.

The alumni entered the weather picture in the fall when the Executive Council voted to purchase a Centennial Year gift for presentation to the University on Alumni Day. It was to be a 30-foot statue representative of space accomplishments by the United States. Fashioned by world-renown sculptor Felix de Weldon, creator of the famous Iwo Jima flag raising at the Marine Corps War Memorial, the statue is an adaption of the Astronaut's Medal, which was also created by de Weldon. The statue of Daniel Boone was to represent the pioneer spirit which led higher education to the present; de Weldon's statue was to symbolize man's journey into the future.

Activity increased when 1974 a rived as the Jane Campbell Built ing was formally dedicated Janua 13 with a luncheon, program ar open house. It was an occasion honor three individuals who hav made significant contributions Eastern. Miss Campbell, a memb of the Eastern music faculty for more than 40 years and author the University's Alma Mater, die in 1967. Through her will, she le a sizable sum to be used to financ music scholarships.

Within the Campbell Building the Clarence H. Gifford Theatrinamed for a 1909 graduate and great benefactor of the Universit A former secretary of the Dram League of America, Mr. Gifford ha endowed a chair of religion an philosophy, and funded a fine art series and scholarships in drama education and science at the University.

The Fred P. Giles Gallery wa named for the former chairman c the Department of Art at Easter from 1939 until his death in 1963

Activities like Homecoming (above) remained the same except to adopt Centennial themes, while the Energy Crisis (right) made the campus aware of a fuel shortage. "A Century of Memories", the Homecoming theme, helped recall Eastern heritage while Centennial Year planners expended their energies in publicizing the University.

Alumni may remember his uncanny cnack for recalling names of former tudents years after they had gradlated.

The day was a beautiful tribute o the honorees and a Centennial xhibition in the Giles Gallery addd a bit of glitter to the occasion. Fitled "A Century of American Paintings," it represented what has been perhaps the most dramatic nistorical period in recorded time. As the program indicated, "The impact of this century on America and on all its institutions is largely nterpreted by the artists of the imes. Thus, it is appropriate that his Centennial Exhibition be included as one of the major events of the Eastern Kentucky University Centennial Year."

A series of resolutions in Frankort and Washington called attenion to the storm in Richmond. Ihrough the efforts of Senator Waler D. Huddleston, "A Century of ligher Education at Eastern University" was entered in the Congressional Record on March 20, 1974. Earlier, Tim Lee Carter had ntroduced a similar resolution into he House of Representatives, Resplution No. 426.

Both of these had been preceded by the recognition in Frankort on January 23 when Representative Dwight Wells and Senator John Lackey, both of Richmond, introduced House Resolution No. 23 and Senate Resolution No. 15 into their respective chambers. During the festivities, Wells' daughter, Terry, escorted President Robert R. Martin to the senate podium to signal Eastern's recognition.

A Centennial Year Pageant, "The Spirit of Eastern" also blew on the scene early in the new year. Eben Henson, director of the Pioneer Playhouse at Danville and his assistant, Constance Phelps were hired to work out the endless details of dramatizing higher education's one hundred year history.

The annual Spring Vacation in March offered the last quiet before the storm. The time had arrived for plans to materialize.

Students began to prepare for a week-long Festival of the Arts in late April. There were operatic performances from the musical groups, a dance presentation from the Dance Theatre, and an art exhibition from the outstanding student works. The musical comedy, "Kiss Me, Kate" was to highlight the week.

Students worked late into spring evenings on unfinished paintings. Long hours on the Gifford stage were exhausting evidence that some weren't learning their lines. But, time would give all an opportunity to perfect their works of art before they went on display.

In the meantime, faculty and staff joined the hustle to weather the impending storm. Dr. Robert Sporre spent long hours readying "Kate" for opening night and then ended up playing a major role when one of the actors became ill. Daniel Shindelbower designed an intricate set for the pageant after which Chad Middleton and his buildings and grounds crew constructed it. Virginia Jinks loaned her dance students for the pageant dance scenes while Mary Ann Walsh encouraged some of her drama students to take part in the pageant pop-ups. John Winnecke, the Radio-TV editor from Public Information, rounded up some willing Little Colonels who donated many hours to the success of the pageant. And few are aware of the long hours Loy Lee spent splicing tapes to give the pageant a professional sound.

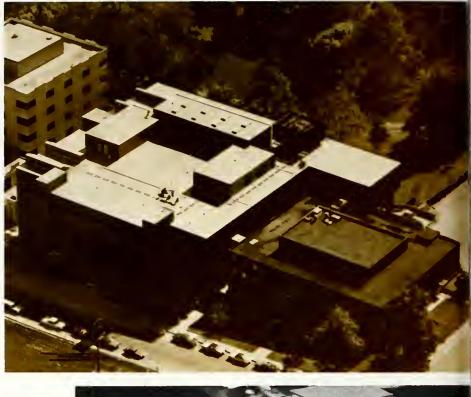

And, behind all these scenes, committees were at work trying to decide on the various honors that would be presented during Alumni Weekend. Twenty-five outstanding athletes were honored in late April, and a committee spent months going through biographical data and seeing that those deserving were recognized. Another committee undertook selection of the 100 outstanding alumni in the history of the institution, a feat which left some unhappy, but everyone amazed at the completion of their mammoth task.

The details were endless. Engaging an orchestra for the Centennial Ball, ordering makeup for the pageant, preparing programs for all the functions, contacting reunion classes for Alumni Day, ordering tickets, flowers, host ribbons . . . testing the strength of the human mind to remember.

But things continued to happen. The winds blew with greater intensity. On April 24-27, the Festival of the Arts progressed with clockwork precision. "Kiss Me Kate" played to capacity crowds. The Dance Theatre's afternoon presentation left one of the participating students flabergasted, "We had people there," he smiled, "there were lots of people there!" Students, faculty, and friends attended the recitals and exhibits. Announced one proud artist, "I have three paintings in the exhibition, and I'm just a freshman! Pretty good, huh?"

The University Center Board's presentations helped to heighten the awareness although they had sponsored various entertainment groups and lecturers throughout the year. Senator Henry "Scoop" Jackson and Vincent Price had lectured earlier and Bill Mauldin's arrival late in the year came as the storm mounted. The Cincinnati Conservatory Chorus, RSVP. — The Cole Porters, and Mac Frampton came when the Centennial winds were beginning to reach gale proportions.

The 25 Outstanding Athletes were honored April 20 when former head coach of the Cleveland Browns, Blanton Collier, greeted the returning athletes. Even the awards presented to the winning athletes were Centennially significant. Each athlete received a Louisville Slugger bat mounted on a

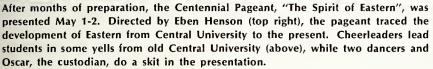

One highlight of the year was the dedication of the Jane T. Campbell Build ing (top) which, flanked by the Burrier and Music Buildings, includes th Clarence H. Gifford Theatre and the Fred P. walnut plaque with a metal plate bearing the Centennial Year medallion and appropriate identification. The bats were turned to the exact specifications of the model used by Earle B. Combs when he was leadoff man for the famous New York Yankees' Murderers Row. The tree from which the bats were made was a 100 year-old ash which had died on the campus sometime earlier.

The honorees were mostly familiar names. Earle Combs, the most famous of all, led the list which sported "Spider" Thurman, '41, who was all-everything during his day on campus, including All-Americar in football. The list featured al sports, including Ken Silvious, '71 from Cross Country/Track, the late Dr. Gilbert Rawlings, '37, golf, Ricl Hill, '71, swimming, and Free Lewis, '46, basketball. And, an ob vious choice, Wally Chambers, '73 Rookie of the Year in the Nationa Football League last year, was hon ored along with his EKU coach, Ro' Kidd, '55. (A complete listing o the honorees appears on page 59)

May 1-2 were the scheduled lates for the Centennial Pageant. Driginally set for the Ravine, a tight chedule forced the move into liram Brock, and after months of echnical problems, the final days aw a flourish unequaled in any other centennial activities. The pening night curtain opened on a et which still sported wet paint. articipating students had reearsed until the morning hours or the last week trying to master he timing involved in the presenation. They had fought long hours nd final exams to do their bit for istory.

The question around campus vas, "Will the pageant make it?" he answer was obvious May 1 as he dancers and actors retold the istory of higher education on the ampus from Central University, hrough Walters Collegiate Institute p Eastern Kentucky University. hrough the use of scrims, slide rojections, film, dancing, and a horus, the history came alive after Il the frustration and doubt. "I ved through those years," said one Iderly retired faculty member, that pageant meant a lot to me. especially remember those war ears and how everybody sacrificed or the good of the country."

For those who had survived the torm enough to stand, the Centenial Ball on May 3 offered an opportunity to dance to the music of the Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra. Brilliant flowers, fountains, gold bunting and all the trimmings touched by the majesty and history of the Keen Johnson Building made the evening a refreshing formal interlude in the Centennial whirlwind.

Time moved on and so did the storm. The annual Senior Luncheon bade farewell to the 1861 graduates who were about to join some 26,-000 other alumni of Eastern.

The flurry brought quiet speculation as to whether or not the campus could survive the full force of the storm that was scheduled to hit from May 10-12. Most felt that if the construction of things had been strong enough, everything could happen that was supposed to happen, and the events could prove to be golden centennial memories.

May 10, 1974. The Keen Johnson Ballroom rumbled to the friendly thunder of 101 Outstanding Alumni, their families, and friends. They represented 20 states and were chosen from hundreds of nominations reviewed by a special subcommittee. Their final selections were based on records of the Alumni Association, interviews, and extensive research over a period of several months.

They represented Walters Collegiate Institute, Eastern Kentucky

State Normal School, Eastern Kentucky State Normal School and Teachers College, Eastern Kentucky State Teachers College and Eastern Kentucky State College.

Dr. John Rowlett, Vice-president for Academic Affairs reminded the group of their place in history, and Art Lund, '37, for many years a familiar face on Broadway, provided a musical salute to his cohorts. His musical trip down memory lane included three of his most famous songs, "Blue Skies," "Mam'selle," and "Joey."

Ethel Marie Adams and her husband John, from Jeff in Perry County, accepted their awards as husband and wife. They were the first. The list continued through Leslie Anderson, '09, the first graduate to officially receive a diploma fror Eastern, and Paul Burnam, promin ent Richmond Banker who repre sented Walters Collegiate Institute The list moved on through doctors judges, accountants . . . actors . . to Joseph Yanity, an Athens, Ohic a lawyer who by virture of his nam received the final award. 10 bronze Centennial Medallions, cas in crystal lucite and encased in leather and velvet presentation cas were admired by proud family an friends.

Pictures of all recipients hav been placed in the Hall of Distin guished Alumni just off Walnut Ha in the Keen Johnson Building. Plan call for additions to the list a Eastern continues to make history

All this, and Alumni Day was ye to come.

Rowlett Views University 'In The

AS WE APPROACH the conclusion of this Centennial year, it is proper that we pause and view Eastern Kentucky University in the perspective of its heritage. We need to feel, to sense, and to understand that the development of higher education on this campus has been for a hundred years a continuous and continuing process, and that Eastern Kentucky University is the capstone of these first hundred years. This University, as it has emerged over a full century, had its beginnings with the foundation of Central University which was chartered March 3, 1873, opened its doors on September 22, 1874, and merged with Centre College in August 1901. Central University was a product of the bitterness and divisiveness that followed the Civil War, and the response of Southern Presbyterians was to establish their own University. And these founders had great dreams - a university with four colleges, a Theological Department, and preparatory schools at Middlesboro, Jackson, Elizabethtown, and on the Richmond campus. The College of Medicine was located in Louisville and produced 900 graduates. The College of Dentistry, also in Louisville, graduated 406 dentists. The College of Philosophy, Letters, and Science, located on the Richmond campus had 300 graduates and the College of Law, also in Richmond, had 15 graduates. In its 27 years of existence over 8,000 students enrolled in the Colleges and preparatory schools of the University.

The campus at Richmond did not remain vacant with the departure of Central University. Walters Collegiate Institute, a classical preparatory school for boys, was chartered in 5eptember 1901, and the continuity of higher education on this campus was unbroken. The Institute was small, but it produced outstanding graduates, many of whom continued their higher education at the finest universities in this nation.

Walters Collegate Institute had a short life for in 1904 the pressures began to mount for the establishment of state normal schools for the preparation of teachers, and in 1906 the General Assembly passed a bill establishing two institutions — Eastern Kentucky State Normal School to be located in Normal School District Number 1 and Western Kentucky State Normal School, to be located in Normal School District Number 2. On March 21, 1906, Governor Beckham signed the bill and it became law. The law did not spell out the locations for these two schools, and there was predictable competition among the communities of Kentucky. Richmond was selected as the site for Normal School Number 1, and Bowling Green was chosen for the location of Normal School Number 2.

These were modest, single-purpose institutions. They were charged with upgrading the preparation of teachers and the basic admission requirement was the completion of the eighth grade. Eastern Kentucky State Normal School demonstrated from the onset a characteristic flexibility and adaptability. Courses of study were squarely related to the educational needs of teachers ---review courses, one, two, and three year certificate courses which moved the institution forward to the point where in 1922 Eastern became a four year institution and was redesignated as the Eastern Kentucky State Normal School and Teachers College. In 1930, the institution's name was changed to Eastern Kentucky State Teachers College and in 1948 it became Eastern Kentucky State College. On February 26, 1966, Governor Breathitt signed a bill renaming the institution Eastern Kentucky University. Each change in name reflected real, substantive changes that had occurred within the institution.

A succession of outstanding leaders have guided the development of the institutions that have culminated in Eastern Kentucky University: Chancellors Breck and Blanton and Presidents Roark, Crabbe, Coates, Donovan, O'Donnell, and Martin. During these hundred years there have been periods of financial depression and inflation, periods of expansion, of declining and even stability of enrollments; there have been wars both declared and undeclared; there have been technological and social changes, some almost imperceptible in the days of Central University, but which have accelerated to a rate in the 1960's and 1970's that they are almost impossible to comprehend. In these hundred years we have developed a mobility that permits us to move freely and quickly about this country and to other continents, and in the course of these hundred years man's thirst for knowledge has steadily increased, and the world in which we live and work has valued and rewarded those who prepared themselves at institutions of higher education.

Many of those who grew up in the years of the great depression found themselves in entirely new roles in the early 1940's. They were in defense plants, on the farms, in other critical occupations and professions, and many of the young able-bodied males were learning first hand the meaning of such names as Guadalcanal, Iwo Jima, Bizerte, Salerno, and Normandy. College campuses were all but vacant, but with the ending of this war, the campuses began to teem with a new type of student, seasoned and matured beyond his years. Through the G. I. Bill of Rights these veterans were given the opportunity to go to college without the financial burdens that faced their older brothers and sisters in the thirties ---they had the opportunity to go to college and make something of themselves and they did - by the millions - and colleges and and universities have never been the same. For the most part these veterans were the sons of the common people, people who worked hard from early to late, whose fundamental goal was to provide food, clothing, and shelter for their families, and anything beyond was considered a luxury, especially the thought of a college education. Higher education has become more accessible to all, not just the veteran, from the mid-forties to this very day. And those of you who became parents in the forties and the fifties joined with other parents in this Commonwealth, because you believed and valued higher education, and you sent to us beginning in the 1960's and continuing into the 1970's your most precious possessions - your sons and your daughters. And these young students came to us in great numbers, with enrollments increasing almost fourfold since 1960, with a 1973 fall enrollment that was in excess of 11,000 students. And ladies and gentlemen, this institution responded, and the most visible evidence of this response is a physical plant that has been developed to provide for the instructional and other functions of the university, and for the adequate housing of our students. It is a marvelous plant that has been increased in value by more than 100 million dollars since 1960. These buildings, in a setting that can only be described as one of beauty, represent the physical strength of this university. You have seen the visible Eastern as you have strolled about this campus today - but there are other dimensions to this university that have been developed in response to the challenge of the 1960's, dimensions that are not nearly so obvious, but are of great significance. For it was in the mid-sixties that the institution received university status and entered its greatest period of academic program expansion. The university was divided into Colleges of Arts and Sciences, Applied Arts and Technology, Business, Education, and Central University College in order to provide for efficient and effective instruction and program development. And with this organization the university reaffirmed its commitment to the disciplines and programs that one would expect to find at a university and provided the framework for new developments. A Graduate School was created to provide for new and expanding graduate programs As I read the history of higher education on this campus I am firmly convinced that this organization, conceived not by a committee, but by President Martin, supported by his office and the Board of Regents, and implemented by the faculty and staff of this university, is one of the most important decisions that has ever been made in terms of its impact on higher education on this campus. This academic organization encouraged, almost demanded, that we expand our vision to develop programs of study reflective of the breadth of student interests and abilities, and consistent with the opportunities and needs developing in our society. It forced us to break traditional mind-sets about populations to be served, how they might be served, and societal needs that ought to be met. We recognized, for example, that law enforcement officers, particularly those in the smaller communities, were often no better off, in terms of preparation for their professions, than the school teachers who enrolled in the normal school in 1906. Not only were these individuals anxious, almost begging for an opportunity to study and to learn, but society was becoming increasingly conscious of crime and violence and demanded that something be done about it. This university responded to this challenge in 1965 and today we have one of the largest law enforcement programs in the nation. We responded with new programs in social work, traffic safety, recreation, business, special education, political science, nursing, and in a variety of technical fields — and in the more traditional program areas there were expansions of instructional, public service, and research roles. The university had the posture of a tightly coiled spring, ready to unleash its strength with confidence and certainty - and it did. Through our Central University College we organized and administered the general education program to be completed by all students irrespective of field of study. And we packaged many of our programs in modules, not unlike the normal school, and in the technical and applied fields a student may earn an associate degree with two years of study and go out into the real world and earn a respectable living or the student may continue on in a baccalaureate program without loss of credit and then to a masters program. We call this approach the career ladder -but it is not really a new concept --for at this institution we have always been concerned with preparing individuals for careers. We see no conflict in the goal of providing for the intellectual development of a student and at the same time equipping the student to enter society as a useful and productive citizen.

The uniqueness about this university, the end product of 100 years of effort, is its breadth and diversity. We are in effect an open university - our programs reflect an awareness that students come to us with wide ranges of abilities and interests. We continue to grow and to serve while many of our sister institutions have experienced substantial enrollment losses. This continued growth at Eastern is attributable, in large measure, to the plan devised in the midsixties, the leadership that has been provided in the implementation of the plan, and the hard work of the administration and faculty. Eastern is recognized nationally as one of the leaders among the 300 plus regional universities of our type, as an institution that is alert, responsive, flexible, and effective in its efforts.

Eastern Kentucky University today is the summation and the blending of the efforts of individuals such as Singleton P. Walters and other supporters who saw to it that Richmond would be the site for an institution of higher education, to the administrators and to the faculty and to the Regents and to the alumni and students of all of these institutions, and to those who have provided the financial support, private and public, that has been essential for the operation of an institution.

This evening we are assembled to pay honor and tribute, to recognize the outstanding living alumni of higher education on this campus. You are a distinctive and distinguished group of individuals who have demonstrated through the quality of your accomplishments and service that excellence transcends all fields of endeavor, and all walks of life. However dissimilar your careers may be, you share at least two things in common, you are alumni of higher education on this campus, and you have been singled out for special recognition because of that which you have achieved. You are living testimonials of the quality of higher education on this campus.

It has been a rewarding experience to me this year to read through the musty catalogs and other documents that describe the evolution of higher education on this campus. This process has both an inspirational and a sobering effect. Great dreams are charted in these documents, some were realized, others were not. One must conclude, I think, that an institution of higher education, if it is to remain alive, must renew itself, and this renewal is achieved best by continuing challenges, and the growth that occurs as a response to these challenges. An institution, like an individual, is in serious danger if it rests on its laurels, its past accomplishments. It must respond to those challenges that present themselves, and it must seek out new challenges.

This institution is ready and poised for entrance into its second century of service. We are physically strong, we have an energetic and dynamic president, we have an outstanding Board of Regents, we are academically well qualified as a faculty, we have a broad base of academic programs that test and develop the intellect and that prepare students for productive lives - and the students who choose to study with us know this — and so do our alumni. And we have the capacity to work together, and we have a hundred years of experience based on a solid foundation of strong character, integrity, and hard work.

The founders of this institution would be proud of Eastern Kentucky University if they could see it today — they would see evidence of their handiwork, of their thoughts, and of their efforts. For in the final analysis, this institution for these hundred years has been built upon the lives of people, dedicated people who felt that it was important to provide on a beautiful campus in Richmond, Kentucky expanding opportunities for higher education for the citizens of this Commonwealth.

This is a commitment that has endured for a full century, and those who will continue this commitment throughout our second hundred years will find a strong, and in my judgment, an indestructable foundation.

As both approach their tenth decade, they display a kind of zest and enthusiasm that makes such occasions beam happiness. Both came with their wives and families to mark the occasion and make the Centennial Year more meaningful. For Mr. Anderson, later developments were to recognize his pioneering spirit and contributions to his University and his community. For Mr. Gifford, the weekend was an opportunity to show his wife, Marjorie, the campus during her first visit.

As the reunion classes held their luncheons and caught up on years of details, the storm planners were keeping an eye on the weather which featured gray clouds and gusts of wind which could have threatened the unveiling of the statue which was scheduled for afternoon ceremonies.

Felix de Weldon Dedicates Alumni

Dr. Fleix W. deWeldon delivers his dedicatory address with the statue which he created towering in the background.

(Editor's note: The Iollowing is the address delivered by Sculptor Felix W. deWeldon at the dedicotion of the University's Centennial Year Statue which he created.)

President Martin commissioned me to create this astronaut statue only seven months ago. This heroic size statute on the campus of Eastern Kentucky University is based on my early original design of the General Thomas D. White trophy commissioned by Dr. Thomas Mc-Knew of the National Geographic Society which the society has presented each year to the Outstanding Astronauts. The trophy was dedicated by President John F. Kennedy in the White House in 1961. In 1969 the medal was presented to Neil Armstrong, Edwin Aldrin and Michael Collins.

As I have said, this trophy was created in 1961-one year before the moon program was begun though the trophy shows the landing on the moon. Upon making the presentation to the astronauts, Dr. Leonard Carmichael, director of research for National Geographic Society said "de Weldon had prophetic foresight in creating this trophy and medal showing the moon landing eight years before the landing was accomplished." Aldrin then spoke up saying "There is still another object shown in the trophy which we have not yet achieved - the space shuttle." The artist and writer can often think ahead of the explorer. He can depict scenes which no human eve will ever witness, either because of the danger involved or the remoteness in time and space. Jules Verne wrote the book "Journey to the Moon" nearly 120 years ago. In reading it we may find many predictions similar to the real trip to the moon in 1969.

This bronze statue with the orbits and its base of granite stands 28 feet high. It shows a young and powerful American with his strong muscular arm launching the saturn rocket with his hand only touched by the flame of the statue ceremonies which saw sculptor Felix de Weldon tell them that the statue "symbolizes the yearning of man to go beyond his limitations and do what seems to be impossible; to reach out for the stars." As Centennial Club members stood in awe of the mammoth statue which now completes the University Center Complex, other returning graduates took time to find more insignificant reminders of the past. Two former coeds from the 1924 class walked through the ravine and recalled its pleasant associations. "This is my tree," said one, "after all, I received two proposals of marriage under it!" Did she accept either one? "No," she smiled, "but I'll never forget those two. I guess the Ravine made them different."

The buzzing continued as the classes and their friends gathered for the annual Alumni Banquet on Saturday evening. For Dr. Robert R.

Martin, EKU president, it was special because his 1934 class had returned to share memories. To Lee Thomas Mills, '57, it was special because as president of the Alumni Association, he presided over the festivities. To June Carol Bonny Williams, '66, it was special because she was to perform two musical selections for the occasion. The classes were recognized and presented pins and certificates as one unsuspecting graduate was about rocket. Above him are the orbits, the earth and the moon with the orbits which were launched at Cape Kennedy circling the earth, to the moon and around it and finally landing on the moon and the return to earth. The left hand receives the space shuttle after it has returned from the space station. The feet of the man standing on the dolphins and the waves portray the landing in the ocean upon return to earth. This method of returning from space will continue until the space shuttle becomes operative. The highly polished granite base has a carved medallion showing the astronauts with the American flag on the moon. Below the medallion is the quotation of Armstrong "That's one small step for manone giant leap for mankind." The gigantic efforts symbolized in this monument are due to the research of scientists and tens of thousands of diligent men and women who worked in and for the space agency. The American people gave the means and support to accomplish the landing on the moon. To me this monument represents the yearning of man to go beyond his limitations, to do what seems to be the impossible and to reach out for the stars.

On July 21, 1969 the first man from earth stepped out on the barren rocks of the moon. Apollo eleven marked the greatest triumph of exploration in the history of mankind, showing that man not only could reach the moon but could survive there. The moon is not a friendly place - airless, waterless and lifeless. Yet it represents an ideal site for a scientific research base and a stepping stone to the planets. Our exploration of outer space can only begin at the moon. The space shuttle will combine the performance of aircraft and spacecraft in one vehicle. The sky lab is the first orbiting workshop and highly sophisticated space station which will be serviced from the ground by the space shuttle. There will eventually be a sky lab cluster harnessing the sun's energy and operated by rotating crews of astronauts. Experience gained in assembling these space stations in orbit will bring nearer the day when man will set out for the planets, since it is only by assembly procedures that huge vehicles will supply the eleven tons of hydrogen, food and water for each three men for every year of flight. Only then can interplanetary expeditions be launched. The mercury flights have proved that man can perform useful functions in space and it is probably that in all future manned space missions, control will be aboard. Man stores energy and can function for a relatively long period of time without external power. He is more difficult to put out of commission by minor injury than is a machine.

For example, let us remember the Apollo 13 mission when Lovell, Swigert and Haise made their way back to earth after the on-board catastrophe: At the National Geographic Society Luncheon when Astronauts Armstrong, Aldrin and Collins received the award medal, my wife Margot was seated next to Collins at the table. (At that time Collins was liason between the state department and the White House). Margot told him that, in her opinion the most important achievement in space was that Lovell, Swigert and Haise on Apollo 13 were able to return to earth after the mission was aborted due to the explosion of one of the oxygen tanks in the service module. It was a long, anxious and gruelling flight back to earth - short of water and oxygen. The crewmen were forced to use lunar module as a "life boat." Collins told my wife that, had the explosion occurred 15 minutes later — after they had reached the dark side of the moon and out of communication with earth and the Houston Space Center, these men could not have been brought back but would have been lost forever orbiting the moon.

For the purpose of space travel man must take his environment along with him. He cannot be engineered. There are of course many unknown space hazards. On earth man is protected by the atmosphere from too much ultraviolet radiation. In space ultraviolet occurs in full range of lethal intensity. Tests have shown also that fatigue in a man performing such tasks as the astronauts will perform can be manifested in several ways, including an increase in range of indifference. He will allow increasingly greater error tolerance, and this may occur without his awarneness. Loss in timing as he becomes fatigued will make him less able to program efficiently. He may execute the right response but at the wrong time. There can also be a disintegration of perception where he will fail to note objects needing attention if they are not in the center of his vision. Because of deficiency in the space cabin there will be greater error tolerance occurring without the astronaut's awareness.

There is no sound in space. It is absolutely quiet because of the absence of atmosphere to propagate sound. There is no sound barrier and no thunderclaps would be heard. A landslide terminating at one's feet would make no sound.

The moon and orbital stations may well be used as starting bases for interplanetary flights to Mars, Venus and beyond. We are no longer bound to our home planet earth.

I sincerely thank Dr. Martin for giving me this opportunity to create this astronaut statue for his university's 100th anniversary celebration and I hope it will be a continuous inspiration to the students in all the years to come.

It gives me the greatest pleasure to present to you President Martin this bronze medal symbolizing space exploration.

to be named the Outstanding Alumus for 1974.

The award went to Leslie Anderson, '09, the first student to officially receive a diploma from Eastern Kentucky State Normal School. There was the standing ovation from appreciative colleagues who realized that he had taken the first step that some 26,000 others were to repeat through the years. How apt that a student with such historic implications could be honored by his Alma Mater during a year when history blew up a storm! "He's on cloud nine tonight," said his sister-in-law, "I don't imagine he'll be down for awhile. He's very proud of this."

It was indeed a significant time for Eastern Kentucky University; it was, in short, the full fury of a memorable storm.

Sunday was a day for different alumni . . . alumni-to-be. Some 1,860 seniors had only hours to go before they would begin their trek through history as Eastern Kentucky University graduates. Morning baccalaureate services featured Dr. Irvin E. Lunger, president of Transylvania University in Lexington. The commencement exercises brought a standing room only crowd of some 12,000 to Alumni Coliseum to hear Lieutenant Governor Julian Carroll address the graduates. Honorary doctorates were presented to Carroll, de Weldon, Board of Regent members Earle B. Combs, Richmond, and William Wallace, Lexington, Dr. Lunger, and Mrs. Mary Jo Gheens Hill, Louisville.

Earlier in the afternoon, some 21 graduating Reserve Officers Training Corps cadets were commissioned into the armed forces, following an address by Lieutenant General E. B. Roberts, commanding general of the U.S. Sixth Army, San Francisco, and one of the EKU alumni honored Friday evening.

The Centennial Year storm began to abate. One more brief recurrence is predicted for September 22, 1974, the actual date upon which Central University, the first predecessor of Eastern opened its doors.

"Make no little plans," quoted President Martin in 1960 when he was inaugurated as Eastern's sixth president. As it turned out, he could very will have been talking about the Centennial Year storm which breezed through the campus for some 12 months.

The weathermen and women who planned the storm had survived the high pressures, low pressures, the barometric pressure and all the pressures that come with recounting 100 years in one. It was, however, a storm that left pleasant memories in its wake.

Unlike the dreaded tornado, the Centennial storm will not occur again for another century . . . time enough to prepare for another assault.

2074 . . . springtime . . . another storm is in full swing. The Pioneers will be a legend of a glorious past;

those present will revel in their history and the storm it has created. The only difference will be they will have twice as much force in their storm . . . and none of us will know how they weather it.

Leslie Anderson, '09 First Graduate Named Outstanding Alumnus

THE CENTENNIAL YEAR has proved to be a significant time in the development of Eastern Kentucky University, a time when we have reflected upon our past and the people who have signaled progress in the development of higher education on the campus.

Leslie Anderson, '09, the 1974 Outstanding Alumnus, is one of those key people who officially started the procession of some 26,-000 graduates when he received the first diploma ever awarded in formal ceremonies from Eastern.

Mr. Anderson began his long career in education one year before he came to Eastern. In 1906 he taught what was then called "common school" near Round Knob. From there he moved on to Sugar Grove in 1907 before entering Eastern Kentucky State Normal School the same year.

He became principal and teacher at Kings Mountain in 1908 and following his graduation in 1909, he became principal and teacher for the Somerset City Schools.

In 1910, he worked as a civil service clerk for the U.S. Census Bureau in Washington, D.C., but returned to teaching briefly in 1911 for the Texarkana, Arkansas City Schools. This was to be his last year in education.

In 1911 he became a solicitor for the Fire and Casualty Insurance Company in Texarkana, and continued in the insurance business for the next 64 years with only a two-year interruption to serve in Europe during World War I.

In 1922 he formed his own company in Texarkana, and since that time, he has distinguished himself as one of the outstanding men in his field. For 43 years he has been on the job in his own company and as he approaches 88 years of age, he still works daily in that business.

Mr. Anderson's loyalty and dedication to Eastern have been obvious over the years. He has provided the Alumni Association with numerous historical artifacts which provide insight into the development of the University. His freshman biology notebook, complete with leaves from the ravine, came to the association last year. His diploma, the first "official" one, hangs in President Martin's office.

He is a member of the Century Club and has represented the University at college and university presidential inaugurations in the southwest. He is one of the last three remaining Pioneers, a group of early graduates who organized themselves some 20 years ago.

Mr. Anderson has also distinguished himself in his civic organizations as well. He is a past commander of the Texarkana American Legion Post, the American Legion Local Post historian, and a member and director of the Texarkana Kiwanis Club, an organization whose meetings he has attended weekly over the past 42 years without a single absence!

In 1908, he wrote in the college newspaper, "The Student," a publication he served as business manager, "The world has a right to exLeslie Anderson, '09, the first official graduate of Eastern, receives his 1974 Outstanding Alumnus award from Ken McCarty, incoming president of the Alumni Association. pect every man to be a producer." For nearly nine decades he has been producing in business, in his community, in every aspect of his life.

Graduation: The Storm Subsides

Graduation, complete with an SRO crowd, took great preparation. A collar adjustment (above) proved to be a bit easier than the hood assist that got caught up in the spring breeze (above right, right, and below right). After all the preparation, proud graduates file solemnly into Alumni Coliseum (bottom) to receive that longawaited degree.

1,861 New Alumni

Some graduates had to search for their places on the program (above), but once the ceremonies started some sat pensive among the 1861 (top left) while one, the 28,000th graduate stood to receive recognition for his unique place in Eastern's history (below).

After the ceremonies were completed, pictures helped record the day. Polaroids in the ravine were common (above) while the alumni camera caught one exhuberant couple sharing the joy of the day (right).

Hall of Distinguished Alumni

ERTAINLY ONE of the highlights of the Centennial Year observance has been the initiation of a Hall of Distinjuished Alumni. Located on the main floor of the Keen Johnson Juilding, the Hall received its first 126 entrants during the spring's Centennial Athletic and Centennial Alumni Awards Banquets. Enshrined in the Hall were 25 of the greatest athletes in Eastern's history and 101 distinguished alumni from other ields, representing Eastern and its campus predecessor, Walters Collegiate Institute.

The banquet hall of the Keen Johnson Building was jammed April 20 for the induction of the athletic honorees and again on May 9 when the alumni awards were announced. Emblematic of their honors, the athletes received a plaque with an Earle B. Combs model bat turned from a 100-year-old campus white ash tree and an engraved plate citing them for "Outstanding contributions to Eastern Kentucky University through accomplishments in athletics."

Honorees at the Centennial Alumni Awards banquet received a cast bronze centennial medallion, set in crystal lucite and encased in a leather presentation case.

The athletic honorees represented seven sports, with football with eight and baseball and basketball with five each leading the way. Earle B. Combs, the baseball Hall-of-Famer, was the oldest recipient — he is a product of the normal school while 1973 graduate and NFL Rookie-of-the-Year Wally Chambers was the youngest. Also included in the group were two former National Basketball Association Rookie-of-the-Year selections, Fred Lewis and Jim Baechtold.

The 101 alumni honorees returned to their alma mater from 20 states and represented more than 25 fields of accomplishment. Youngest among the honorees was Rupert Stephens, a 1964 graduate with a key role in the nation's space program. And the earliest graduate honored was Leslie Anderson, the first person to receive an Eastern diploma, in 1909.

The special selection sub-committees of the Centennial Committee had monumental tasks. Both the athletic and alumni selection bodies screened hundreds of nominations, conducted interviews and extensive research before making their final decisions. The persons presented on the following pages represented their selections for the initial entrants into the Hall of Distinguished Alumni.

And, of course, there is D'Donnell Weather, credited for the incanny string of pretty nights that have graced the summer outdoor commencement exercises since the beginning of his administration.

"The Eastern Kentucky University Community has suffered the tragic loss of one of its great founders and most devoted servants with the passing of its President-emeritus, Dr. William Francis O'Donnell.

"The fifth president of this institution, Dr. O'Donnell was a gentle and compassionate man who served for 19 years, the longest tenure of any Eastern president, until his retirement in 1960. During his long administration he directed the campus through the trying years of World War II and the challenging period that followed.

"Dr. O'Donnell was my immediate predecessor in the office of the president, and I have always treasured the opportunity I have had to seek his advice and counsel during my administration. He was always very supportive of my efforts and I never heard, at any time, a single word of criticism from him concerning the changes we have made in the institution.

"' 'Mr. O'D' as he was known by all who loved and admired him, will be remembered as a truly remarkable educator, who had served well in Kentucky's public schools for 30 years before he became Eastern's president. However, the University Community and I will covet most the memory of him as a forthright and honest man who cherished this institution for the educational opportunities that it offers to the young people whom he knew and loved so well . . ."

It's a pride I feel for all ou athletes who receive their diplomas, indi cating that they did not lose track of thei primary goals as they competed on ou teams.

Traffic Safety: A $140,000 Grant

A $140,000 federal program aimed at identifying weaknesses in current methods of handling cases involving intoxicated drivers is being coordinated by Eastern's Traffic Safety Institute.

Dr. Jerry L. Miller, associate professor of Traffic Safety at the Institute, is supervising the project, and two other Eastern employees are working with Dr. Jerry L. Leber, a former Eastern student and Danville native, is the project's education specialist, and James D. Sewell, a graduate of Centre College and former employee of the Kentucky Department of Transportation, is media specialist.

The program is called TAP, an acronym for Traffic-Alcohol Program, and involves four main areas of emphasis: public information and education, intense enforcement, judicial attention, and alcohol re-education and rehabilitation.

In the education and public information phase of the program, Dr. Miller said the TAP staff has been working closely with representatives of the Fayette County Schools system to develop an alcohol-related curriculum for the high schools and plug other alcohol information into Fayette County classrooms. Information in the form of television and radio spot announcements, newspaper articles and feature stories, pamphlets and brochures is also being distributed through representatives of the media and by TAP staff members personally. Dr. Miller, Mr. Sewell and Mr. Leber are all making themselves available for groups that wish information on the program.

Twenty-four officers of the Lexington Metropolitan Police Department received special training at the Traffic Safety Institute in the operation of the breathalyzer and in detection and apprehension of alcoholimpaired drivers. The officers are patrolling Fayette County streets and roads looking only for intoxicated drivers. TAP patrols operate only during those hours of high incidences of alcohol-impaired driving.

"It is difficult," says Dr. Miller, "to make the public see that TAP is not a Gestapolike enforcement tactic being used to severely crack down on intoxicated drivers when you have twenty-four extra policemen patrolling only for these cases. But it is actually a research project designed to find out how the system can be improved."

Once a case is apprehended by a TAP officer, special attention is given in the courts. Judges recognize them by specially-marked court forms and try, within the limits of the law, to encourage them to attend routine alcohol re-education courses. Each case is screened to determine whether or not there is evidence of severe alcohol problems. If there is such evidence, the cases are encouraged to seek rehabilitative treatment.

Once rehabilitation or alcohol re-education has begun, the cases are returned to the courts for final adjudication.

For The Kids: Ice Cream Bars

Third grade students from schools in Madison County ate 1,020 ice cream bars at a recent demonstration of farm milk production at Eastern.

They also drank 1,020 cartons of milk during the special event, sponsored by the EKU Department of Agriculture and the Dairy Council of the Mid-South.

EKU students of dairying and feed nutrition showed the youngsters how milk is produced, from cow to carton. They were assisted by Tina Sandy, Lexington, program coordinator of the Council.

The children punched buttons that operated a portable milker. They learned through pictures, diagrams and other visual aids all about cows' stomachs and how dairy feed is converted into milk.

They learned about dairy products by playing food bingo and the food walk, trying their skill at dairy quiz boards and the mystery food container, and churning butter.

All members of the Rookies are majors in law enforcement study at Eastern.

Micki, a former airline stewardess and a parachutist, said the members will volunteer their services to law enforcement agencies in times of crisis and extra need. They plan to visit police departments and correctional institutions soon to observe their operation.

The Rookies also will assist the EKU campus security forces at public events and other times of extra duty.

One of the chief efforts of the Rookies will be recruiting qualified students of law enforcement. They will work as Guides at the annual Career Days program at Eastern attended by prospective students interested in entering the field. The Rookies will also recruit high school seniors into Eastern's law enforcement study program.

Ralph W. Whalin: Teacher, Craftsman, Friend

By Robert M. Worthington, '48

Professor Ralph W. Whalin, who retired as professor of industrial education at the end of the 1973 Fall semester, has made a significant impact on Eastern Kentucky University. His influence has affected the lives of hundreds of alumni and their families.

My feelings about Ralph Whalin were expressed on May 14, 1972, when it was my privilege to deliver the commencement address at Eastern. My son, Chuck, was graduating at the time, and he, like his older brother Bob, had found a friend away from home in Mr. Whalin. I stated in the commencement address:

It has been more than thirty years ago since I came to this campus in 1939 to prepare for a career as a teacher. I chose Industrial Arts because of the influence of a great teacher, Professor Ralph Whalin, who was then and still is today, in his 34th year at Eastern, concerned first and foremost about his students. He emphasized the importance of caftsmanship, of doing every job to the best of your ability. Professor Whalin, chosen by the faculty as the first faculty member to serve on Eastern's Board of Regents, exemplifies for me the greatness of Eastern!!

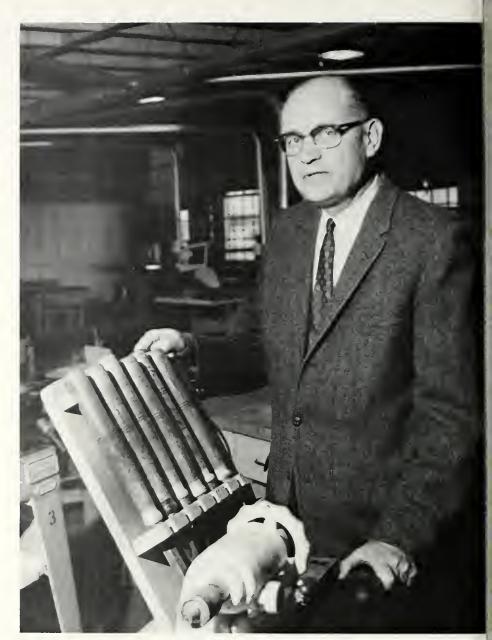

Ralph Warren Whalin was born July 3, 1908, in Edmondson County, Kentucky, to John M. and Ella Davis Whalin. The fifth of six children, his mother died when he was five. His father was a rural school teacher and farmer until Ralph was age twelve, when he moved his entire family to Bowling Green in order that they might attend Western Kentucky State Normal School. Ralph worked in the Western's Industrial Production Department for two years as a high school student, and during all of his college career.

While a student at Western in 1932, Mr. Whalin met Virginia Brasher, whom he married two years later. Mr. and Mrs. Whalin have two sons, Robert and David.

He received his bachelors degree in 1932 at Western and accepted a teaching position at Danville High School, where he taught for four and a half years. He taught for a year at University City (Missouri) High School after completing his Masters of Education degree at the University of Missouri. Ralph Whalin came to Richmond in 1937 as one of the two full-time instructors in the Industrial Arts Department. As soon as he arrived on the scene at Eastern Kentucky State Teachers College, the Department of Industrial Arts began to change. A new facility was designed and constructed as a part of the new Fitzpatrick Arts Building, which was occupied in 1939.

During World War II (from 1941-1945), Mr. Whalin served as an instructor trainer at the Armored Force School at Fort Knox, Kentucky.

Two of Mr. Whalin's colleagues at the Armored Force School were asked to provide a brief statement recalling some interesting professional or personal experience. Dr. M. Ray Karnes, for many years professor at the University of Illinois and currently at the University of Southern Mississippi, recalled his impressions of Mr. Whalin as a graduate student at the University of Missouri and later at Fort Knox, and on the Eastern campus:

The glowing reports transmitted to me upon my arrival on the Missouri campus in 1938 about a brilliant young Ralph Whalin who fin-ished his masters at that institution in 1937 and joined the Eastern Kentucky staff. My first per-sonal encounter with this same young man at Fort Knox in early 1942 and our two years of very close collaboration there. Ralph's inviting an obnoxious colleague of ours to do battle on a grassy knoll at Fort Knox. His retrieval of a long-muzzled .4S revolver from an irate Eastern Kentucky student hell-bent on doing-in an older Kentucky student hell-bent on doing-in an older colleague colleague. The solid stream of very outstanding students and young colleagues under Ralph's influence who very rapidly moved onto the national scene and the greater number who served admirably in the far reaches of Kentucky and her environs and thus became equally distinguished. My enduring gratitude to Ralph for the mas-terful manner in which he steered my own son, George, through Eastern and launched him upon a successful career.

The two occasions during the 50's when Ralph was offered positions at the University of Illinois at substantial increases in salary, both of which he, or Virginia, rejected. My current realization that he, or more likely she, made the proper decision, for to have left Eastern would have interrupted the growth of what has become a legend at Richmond, in Kentucky, in the nation. The very strong conviction that few if any teachers in America have ever been more suc-cessful in transmitting to students and colleagues a higher regard for craftsmanship, lofty ideals with respect to right and wrong, and the tradi-tional American Work ethic than has Ralph Whalin, the "Ar. Chips" of Eastern Kentucky University, who is held in great esteem by his former students and colleagues throughout the land. Not only that, but a man standing straight and tall among men and in the eyes of his maker.

Dr. William J. Micheels, Distinguishe Professor and Chancellor Emeritus at th University of Wisconsin at Menomonie an a long time friend and professional co league, had this to say:

Master craftsman — gentleman. These are the two "descriptors" I would place in the retrieval file in case anyone wishes to locate evidence about the traits and accomplishments of Ralph Whatin Whalin, I first met Ralph 32 years ago when we were armed with trade and job analyses and a host of teaching techniques with a battle of Fort Knox" ing instructors for the Armored Force School. My respect and admiration for Ralph began at that time and has continued ever since. He is that rare teacher about whom many Eastern graduates will be reminiscing for years. My hunch is that the reminiscences will be fond recollections under one or both headings master craftsman and gentleman.

'He is that rare teacher about whom many Eastern grads will be reminiscing for years."

For many years, Ralph Whalin has been member of the Mississippi Valley Indusrial Teacher Educators Conference. Dr. H. H. London, Professor Emeritus at the Unirersity of Missouri and formerly Conference chairman, and Dr. Rupert N. Evans, former Dean of the College of Education at the University of Illinois and current Conference chairman, recalled their association with Ralph. Dr. London stated:

It has been my good fortune to know personally most of the leaders in Industrial Education in this country during the past fifty years. As I think of these people one by one, Ralph Whalin, of Eastern Kentucky University, stands out as a unique personality. Without exception, the many Eastern Kentucky graduates who came to the University of Missouri over the years to do graduate work in Industrial Education came well-founded in skills and technical knowledge. Moreover, they came with an abiding faith in the intrinsic value of their work, enthusiasm for the opportunities it offered them, and an obvious respect for Mr. Whalin. For over thirty years I was associated with Mr. Whalin in the Mississippi Valley Industrial feacher Educators Conference where I found him to be a very likable person, a critical thinker, utimately every idea or proposal presented by without of a conference of the conference

For over thirty years I was associated with Mr. Whalin in the Mississippi Valley Industrial Teacher Educators Conference where I found him to be a very likable person, a critical thinker, and a staunch defender of his ideas and beliefs. Ultimately every idea or proposal presented by either him or any member of the Conference got tested against Mr. Whalin's standards of craftsmanship and teaching experience. In doing so, he was good-natured, considerate of others, kind, but uncompromising. When he pounded his sentences out with conviction, people listened.

Dr. Rupert Evans, from the University of llinois, recalled that Ralph had a characteristic activity which added enormously to the growth of our field. When he identified an individual who had potential for making a major contribution to the profession, he would work quietly behind the scenes to get that person selected for important committee, writing, or teaching assignments. The result was a far more rapid in-service development of the individual than could have occurred naturally. Usually the person whose development was being pushed knew nothing of Ralph's activity in his behalf. I would venture that half of the leaders in our profession today owe far more of their expertise to Ralph than they will ever know.

There is not a leader in industrial education at any college or university in the nation who is not familiar with the contribution that Ralph Whalin has made in this field. A statement by Dr. G. Harold Silvius, professor and coordinator of industrial education at Wayne State University in Detroit, typifies the feeling toward him:

Ralph W. Whalin has made a distinguished professional contribution to technology and industrial education. His ability as a superb craftsman made it possible for him to help those in industrial education focus on an application of scientific and technological principles in industrial arts education. This influence has made it possible for him to have the opportunity to serve as one of the most able leaders in our field.

field. Professor Whalin's leadership at Eastern Kentucky University has not gone unnoticed by those of us who have had the opportunity to have been on their campus. His work as a teacher, and as chairman of the department, has always been highly commended and has attributed greatly to the status and recognition of the program in industrial education technology at Eastern Kentucky University.

As important as recognition from fellow professionals is, Ralph Whalin was always more concerned with the welfare and development of his students. His deep interest in student problems and possibilities often occupied a ten or twelve hour day. He was always willing to take time to talk to students, to discuss their aspirations, their goals, and their problems in depth. He never seemed to be in a hurry, a trait that is often very difficult for a chairman of a growing department to cultivate. Typical of his ability to start young people with potential up the career ladder is a statement by M. Carter Murphy, director of technical and vocational education for the Petersburg, Virginia, school system. Mr. Murphy expressed his feelings in a letter presented to Mr. Whalin at the scholarship dinner in his honor last December:

There have been very few people that have had as profound an influence upon my life than you. In fact, I can think of only four others — my mother, father; wife and minister. I am in the teaching profession because of your very personal interest in me and the admiration that I felt for you as master teacher. You may recall that I enrolled in your class in January of 1945 as a special student to take your course in cabinet making, so that I might become qualified to open a cabinet and furniture making shop. I had no idea of going on for a degree and certainly no thought of becoming a teacher, because I believed that I did not posses the intelligence to achieve either goal. It was through your persuasion that J enrolled as a full time student the next semester and began my training to become an Industrial Education teach-er. As you know, I moved on from the class-room and served as an Elementary Principal, Junior High Principal, Supervisor and now as Director of Vocational and Adult Education for the City of Petersburg, Virginia. The only rea-son for the preceding statement is to make the point that Ralph Whalin made it all possible because he helped me to believe that I could do it.

Professor Whalin's belief in standing on principles and the courage of conviction were expressed in not what he said but in what he did. Chester Jennings of Beattyville, Kentucky recalls a Whalin axiom: "People and methods may change, but principles such as goodness and honesty never change" - "Stand firm in your convictions and never water down your beliefs" ---- "Remember that we cannot teach character - we have to develop it."

It was primarily through the efforts of Ralph Whalin that the Kentucky State Department of Education created the first full time position of State Supervisor of Industrial Arts in 1956. Because of his constant and persistent concern that all of the many branches of industrial education and technology be brought together for the common good, he was one of the founders of the Kentucky Industrial Education Association in 1957. C. Nelson Grote, president of Schoolcraft College in Michigan and first State Supervisor of Industrial Arts in Kentucky, credited Ralph Whalin with not only establishing his office, but also being the motivating force that held together the Kentucky-Tennessee Industrial Arts Conferences.

Professor Whalin is active in many educational organizations, including Phi Delta Kappa, lota Lambda Sigma, the National Education Association, the Kentucky Education Association and many others. Beginning as early as 1938 and continuing through his career, he wrote and published articles in educational and technological journals. Although he was invited on several occasions to put his extensive knowledge of methods of instruction, curriculum development and technical subject matter into book form, he preferred to devote his life and his countless energy into developing his students, his department, and his university.

His fellow faculty members recognized his influence and stature, not only on the campus but throughout the state and nation, when they nominated him as the first faculty member to be named to the Eastern Kentucky University Board of Regents. He carried out this responsibility with distinction for three years during the time of Eastern's most rapid growth.

Former students and friends of Professor Whalin honored him at a testimonial dinner in December, 1971, at the Keen Johnson building on campus. More than 350 people came from across the nation to pay tribute to him and to participate in the establishment of the Ralph W. Whalin Scholarship. Dr. Robert R. Martin, EKU president, accepted a commemorative plague to be permanently mounted in the Fitzpatrick building and praised Professor Whalin for his long and distinguished service to the University. A permanent scholarship fund has been established so that the interest income will provide the annual scholarship monies. The scholarship will be awarded annually to an outstanding junior majoring in industrial education or industrial technology. Contributions to the fund are being handled by Dr. Clyde O. Craft, fund treasurer, and may be mailed to him at any time at the Department of Industrial Education and Technology at Eastern Kentucky University.

Professor and Mrs. Whalin have purchased land near Kentucky Lake and are planning to build a retirement home there in the near future. His countless friends and former students wish them a long and happy retirement knowing that Mr. Whalin's positive influence will live on forever. In the words of Alfred North Whitehead --- "A teacher affects eternity: he can never tell where his influence stops." Ralph Whalin was such a teacher!

Dr. Worthington, a 1972 Outstanding Alumnus and former student of Mr. Ralph Whalen at Eastern, is presently teaching at Rutgers University. He had previously served as Associate Commissioner of Adult, Vocational and Technical Education in the U. S. Office of Education in Washington, D. C.

Drs. Kuhn/Faughn: Writing 'Phun Physics'

Two faculty members of the Eastern Ken tucky University physics department ar writing a book on "Physics for People Whi Think They Don't Like Physics."

The professors, Dr. Karl F. Kuhn and Di Jerry Faughn, have signed a contract to write the textbook for the W. B. Saunder Publishing Co.

The book is intended for use in course by non-science majors for whom the authors have taught the physics course fo a number of years at Eastern.

They are incorporating into their boo examples and illustrations which they have found to be interesting and real to student of physics who are not majoring in the subject.

Drs. Faughn and Kuhn feel that physic can be "phun" and that the dull forma approach found in most texts is detrimenta to students' learning.

Spring Sports: OVC Honors EKU

Eastern track star Tyrone Harbut, baseball players Howie Roesch and Dave Theiler and golf coach Glenn Presnell were honored this year by the Ohio Valley Conference.

Presnell was named OVC Golf Coach of the Year, while Harbut, Roesch and Theiler received all-conference recognition for their respective sports. A former Nebraska All-American halfback, long-time Eastern football coach and the university's first full-time athletic director, Presnell has served as golf coach at Eastern since 1956. During this 18-year span, he has compiled a record of 170-77-8 for an impressive winning percentage of .688.

His 1974 golf team finished with a 7-2 dual meet record and an eighth place finish in the OVC tournament at Murray two weeks ago. This past season, EKU put on the links one of the youngest teams ever with no seniors listed on the roster.

The highlight of the '74 season came when sophomore Dan Bogdan fired a threeunder par 141 to lead the Eastern golf team to a victory in its 10-team EKU spring invitational tournament.

Harbut, a junior from Lexington, was an All-OVC choice for the second straight season. He won the 440-yard dash in the OVC meet this year, recording a school record-tying :47.4.

He led Eastern to its second consecutive fourth place finish in the OVC this past year and to a 6-3 dual meet record. Harbut, coached by Art Harvey, was also a member of the second place mile relay team and the fifth place 440-yard relay team at the conference meet.

Roesch and Theiler, both seniors, completed very successful EKU careers this past spring. Roesch, a lefthanded pitcher from Fairfield, Ohio, finished the spring with a 4-3 record and a 2.95 E.R.A. His final career totals show: 22 wins, 16 losses, 192 strikeouts, 122 walks, 18 complete games and a 3.38 E.R.A.

Theiler, a centerfielder from Louisville who was a member of the 1973 All-OVC team, battled a slump all season long and hit just .232. However, he led the team in runs scored with 32 and walks, 27, and tied for the team lead in doubles (six) and home runs (five).

Theiler's final career totals included 498 at bats, 109 runs scored, 144 hits, 30 doubles, four triples, 22 home runs, 81 runs batted in, 43-48 stolen bases and a .289 batting average.

Coach Jack Hissom's EKU baseball team finished 13-13 this past spring and compiled a 24-24-2 ledger for the '73-74 year.

Women's PE: A B-Ball Workshop

A long time before Senate Bill 73 was passed, the Eastern Department of Physical Education for Women planned workshops for women coaches. Bill 73 is the legislation which states that every high school in Kentucky must have a team for women in every sport that exists for men.

Now, due to the current need for women coaches, the workshops at Eastern involved close to S0 participants. A total of six hours credit, graduate and undergraduate, were available to these participants. Three different classes were set up to help satisfy the coaching needs of the students.

The Alumni March Again!

Eastern's Department of Music is helping set the pace for Homecoming '74 with the formation of the First Annual Alumni Band. This group of alumni will form homecoming morning for rehearsal of several numbers to be played at half-time of the Eastern-Murray game. Tentative plans also call for a "get re-acquainted" banquet to be held that day. Membership is open to all former EKU students who spent at least one semester in the band.

Bands have played a long and colorful role since their inception at Eastern in 1928. Many fans remember not only the numerous fine half-time shows the band has presented over the years, but also those special events such as the trips to bowl games. Who could forget the look on Mr. K's face on "Mr. K Day" in 1964? What about the time the band performed the 1812 Overture using real cannons? These and many other memories will spring back to life with the alumni band at Homecoming '74.

Cecil and Sheila McFarland, '70 Serve With Peace Corps In South Pacific

A Lawrenceburg couple who traded their Kentucky home for two years with the Peace Corps are teaching agricultural skills and the English language on an island in the South Pacific.

CECIL D. and SHEILA McFAR-LAND '70, joined the Peace Corps in 1972 and were assigned to the Ponape District of Micronesia, an American trust territory.

The trust territory includes 2100 islands in a 3 million square mile area, about half the size of the continental United States. Total land area, however, is comparable to about half that of Rhode Island.

During the past four centuries the islands have been claimed by Spain, Germany and finally Japan. After World War II the United States, in an agreement with the United Nations, assumed administration of the islands.

McFarland, 25, teaches an animal science program he helped develop at the Ponape Agriculture and Trade School. Outside the classroom, he has organized and managed a piggery, and has trained a Micronesian counterpart who will take over management when he leaves.

McFarland, once an agronomist with the Kentucky Department of Highways, said that he considers his work in Micronesia to be helpful and significant.

"Agriculture is important to developing nations. Teaching and developing agriculture can help fit the needs of the people," he wrote recently.

Twenty - four - year - old Sheila teaches English at the school, which has students from many islands of Ponape District. The English language is assuming an increasingly important role in the lives of Micronesians. Nine major languages are spoken in the islands, and none is used throughout the territory. Local government leaders and American officials are attempting to establish English as a common language, and it is used in official documents and in all formal instruction.

The McFarlands live in a concrete block house on a high school campus. They have their own garden to supply much of their food, which is supplemented by canned goods.

After teaching all morning, Mc-Farland applies his expertise on a farm on the island while his wife is busy with housework. For relaxation they may go to a nearby sand island for swimming.

Moving from Kentucky to Micronesia can be quite a change, but adjustment for the McFarlands was eased considerably by the friendliness of the islanders. "The people seem to go out of their way to make you feel at home," McFarland said. "They are patient in showing us how things should be, and they do make allowances when they know our culture differs from theirs."

As an example, Mrs. McFarland noted that on their island men and women sit on opposite sides of the aisle in church. They expect Americans, however, to follow their own custom and sit together.

They are among 200 Peace Corps volunteers in Micronesia. There are 7400 volunteers serving in 69 developing nations around the world.
