Benefits Are Real

By Clifford B. Fagan, Executive Secretary
National Federation of State H.S.A.

EARLIER THIS FALL two San Jose State College psychology professors named Bruce C. Ogilvie and Thomas A. Tutko reported with some emphasis the results of a study from which they concluded athletic participation does not contribute to the development of character. The report has been published in the October issue of Psychology Today under the title, SPORT: IF YOU WANT TO BUILD CHARACTER, TRY SOMETHING ELSE. The Professors contend they found nothing to support the premise that sport "builds character". They write, "We found no empirical support to the tradition that sport builds character . . . The personality of the ideal athlete is not the result of any molding process but it comes out of a ruthless selection process which comes out of all levels of sports."

WE BELIEVE ATTENTION should be called to the fact that certain aspects of the report can be misleading. Whether this was intended or not is really of no importance to those of us who have a responsibility in the administration and conduct of interscholastic athletics. It is noted the title is phrased to attract maximum attention and to indicate participating in sports is not too beneficial to the player.

IT IS NECESSARY TO COMMENT on the report because of the frequent reference that participation in sports does develop character—whether this reference be in jest or be made seriously. Comment is appropriate because of society's interest in "accountability." Thus, "Why do we have interscholastic athletics?" "Are athletics desirable?" "Is competition necessary?" are questions asked. Unfortunately those who take a negative point of view are frequently more responsive and louder than those of us who accentuate the positive.

THE TESTING PROGRAM is said to have involved 15,000 athletes. Personnel from 27 professional teams and from an unreported number of college and high school squads was included. We are not certain why the professionals were included. In so doing, the validity of the report can be seriously questioned. We are not aware that professional athletes are engaged in sport for the purpose of enhancing the character of the participant. To the credit of the professionals, they never make any claim that playing baseball, basketball, or football at their level contributes to character improvement or even to a more pleasing personality. It is universally acknowledged that professional sports are entertainment and are not educative in intent or purpose. In addition there are those studies which indicate convincingly that an individual's character is determined by the time of post-adolescence. Very few professionals, if any, could have their participation affect their character which has been established by the time they enter a professional sport.

THERE ARE MANY OF US WHO KNOW FROM EXPERIENCE that participation in athletics is rewarding to the participant. It is gratifying to us that many eminent students of growth and development, including several leading psychologists, support this position. For example, Bruce L. Bennett of Ohio State University recently wrote as follows, "Those of us in physical education and sports should never minimize the potential that exists in competitive athletics to improve human behavior. This potential is recognized and appreciated by many people outside our field. For example, psychologist Ernest Ligon discussed the development of a wholesome personality and emphasized the need to dispell fear, anger, and greed. He stated the best way to avoid the growth of these psychologically destructive qualities is by fostering sportsmanship." Another psychologist, Dr. Henry C. Link, wrote as follows in his book, A REDISCOVERY OF MORALS: "Fortunately, there are few areas in which the pedagogy of applied ethics still exists. Conspicuous among these is the field of competitive games and sports. In the department of physical education the rules of tennis, hockey, basketball, track, and many others are scrupulously taught. All the specific rules of these games are ethical rules which rest on the underlying concept of sportsmanship." Dr. Link is saying playing the game according to the rules is more important than winning.

DOCTORS LIGON AND LINK ARE EXAMPLES of two scholars who understand the purpose of interscholastic athletics. Their commitments indicate they strongly support athletics conducted ethically. They are but two of many psychologists who recognize a need for interscholastic athletics and support a program of sports.

STATE ASSOCIATIONS THROUGHOUT THE NATION recognize that if competitive athletics are to accomplish their purpose, they must be conducted in a sportsmanlike attitude. Almost without exception, State Associations were organized with this as one of the principal objectives. It is their purpose to maintain a sportsmanlike atmosphere at interscholastic contests. There has been an extremely high degree of success in the accomplishment of this purpose by State Associations. As a matter of fact, without State Associations assuming a regulatory responsibility in this area and without their disciplinary action, the interscholastic programs would be much less successful than they are now. Based upon the criteria of Doctors Ligon and Link, we feel reassured participants and spectators are deriving benefits in the area of sportsmanship from the interscholastic competition.

IT IS SIGNIFICANT TO NOTE here that when a proposal for the elimination of varsity sports in Philadelphia was being considered recently, a great number of students, spectators as

New Assistant

Louis Stout

Louis Stout, head basketball coach at the Bates Creek High School for the past two years, has been named to the staff of the Kentucky High School Athletic Association as an Assistant Commissioner. He assumed his new duties on December 1.

The new assistant, who is thirty-two years of age, was born in Cynthiana, Kentucky. He graduated from the Cynthiana High School in 1959. He had been on the 1958 Cynthiana High State Tournament basketball team as a junior, and he made All-State as a senior, playing in the Kentucky-Indiana and the East-West All-Star games.

Louis Stout attended Regis College on an athletic scholarship, earning four letters. In 1961 he was named to the Little All-America third team, and he received honorable mention in 1963. He graduated from Regis in 1963 with a B.A. degree in history, physical education and sociology.

For two years after his graduation, Stout worked with juvenile delinquents for the state of Colorado. In 1965 he returned to Kentucky, taking the head coaching job at Dunbar High School. He remained at Dunbar until the end of the 1966-67 season when the school was phased out. He joined the Bates Creek faculty as an instructor and assistant basketball coach in 1967, becoming head coach at the beginning of the 1969-70 season. He led the Commodores to district championships the past two years.

Mr. Stout is married to the former Anna Mabson of Lexington. They have an eight-year-old son, Juan RaMon. The Stouts are members of the New Zion Methodist Church in Scott County.

In Memoriam

Jack Frost Wells

Jack Frost Wells, veteran Floyd County high school basketball coach, died on November 1 in a Pikeville hospital after a year long illness. He had spent nineteen of his forty-five years in the Floyd County schools, serving the Prestonsburg and Auxier high schools and more recently as a social worker in the school system.

Having served in the Army in World War II for two and a half years, Jack Frost Wells returned to the Auxier High School where he graduated in 1947. He then entered Pikeville College and played basketball there for two years, transferring to Lincoln Memorial University where he played basketball for two more seasons. He began his high school coaching career at the Auxier High School in 1951. He spent sixteen seasons coaching basketball at Auxier and Prestonsburg, staying at Prestonsburg when the two schools merged in 1963.

Mr. Wells earned his M.A. degree from Eastern Kentucky University in 1970, coming to the superintendent's office in July of that year as a social worker. He was a member of the Prestonsburg Methodist Church. Surviving, besides his mother, are his widow, Mrs. Dorothy Carter Wells; a daughter, Susan Elizabeth Wells, and a son, Jack Carter Wells; and two brothers, Charles J. Wells of Pikeville and James D. Wells of Ripley, Ohio.

Benefits Are Real

well as participants, came forward to give the program unqualified support. Michael D. Salvo, a student at Philadelphia Central High School, asked the question, "What do we (students) see in sports that board members (school) do not see?" And then he went on to explain as follows: "To begin with, any sport demands teamwork, a most valuable asset in learning how to achieve good working relationships with other people, a learning experience which is not found in any classroom. When an athlete faces defeat, he doesn't seclude himself from the rest of the world and let his frustrations pyramid into a nervous breakdown. He learns from his mistakes and aims higher the next time and whether a man chooses sports or business as a goal in life, learning how to face defeat and knowing how to control its agony cannot be better taught anywhere than in athletic competition. I would suggest at this point that if the athletic program was supplemented rather than terminated and more students became interested instead of turned away, maybe the present drug and gang problems would be eliminated. I would also suggest that if this program is terminated, these other problems will be invariably worse as the needs which the program has fulfilled will be voided."

AT THE TIME OF THE PHILADELPHIA PROBLEM, a girl student, Edyth A. Fleming of the High School for Girls, also wrote to her local school board in support of interscholastic athletics. She commented as follows: "A look into world events proves the profound impact of sport and its ability to build bond between people of different cultures, races, and ideologies . . . Without varsity sports it is logical to believe every phase of education will change physically, morally, and academically . . ." Because athletically motivated high school students look to the program as a means to an end or a stepping stone to greater achievement, they become determined to achieve their goals. These are fine zealous classmates who take the responsibility to measure their conduct on a true yardstick for others to follow. These kids stick to their goals which eventually enrich their lives, their schools, our society. They live wholesomely, keep in condition, and their behavior catches on, giving a good example in many ways. Their best talents are put forward and developed for thousands of spectators.

IT HAS BEEN AMPLY DEMONSTRATED that participation in a well developed program of interscholastic athletics contributes to the education, growth, and development of the players and spectators. There is no question but: there is value in establishing regular hours and habits, there is value in a good diet, there is need to control tempers, sacrifice can contribute to the common good, that misfortune must be accepted with serenity, and finally and perhaps most importantly, that there is enjoyment in good competition. The record is clear that habits are acquired and these attitudes can be learned. Whether or not any or all of them are classified by certain psychologists as character traits is not a very important matter. A label is not of concern. The fact the benefits from participation do accrue and the fact participation in a wholesome program is beneficial to boys and girls is the important thing.

Sportsmanship

Basketball as a sport lends itself to more abuse by fans, players and coaches insofar as sportsmanship is concerned than most sports. The fans, coaches and players are as close to the play as the officials, and consequently form opinions whether or not the calls made are correct or not. Because this situation is present it is all the more reason why school administrators make a serious effort to create the atmosphere of fair play and good sportsmanship at all home games. Coaches must promptly discipline players who create problems, regardless of the player's ability. Spectators, whether they be high school students, pupils in the lower grades, alumni or residents of the community, all have an obligation to show courtesy and sportsmanship at the athletic event. The coach, by his calm attitude can do much to create the desired goals of fair play and respect for officials.
